Hatch thriving after surviving 'Survivor'

By Josh B. Wardrop
CNC ARTS WRITER

Richard Hatch endured 39 days on the remote island of Pulau Tiga in the South China Seas. Right now, he's just trying to survive his schedule.

He walked away from CBS's "Survivor" with $1 million and the nickname "The Snake." And now the sky appears to be the only limit for Hatch, the corporate trainer who recently began a new career as co-host of "The Wilde Thing Morning Show" on Star 93.7 FM, in Boston. The sky, and the 24 hours allotted to him each day.

"We have about... oh, 12 minutes," says Hatch, settling into a chair in the somewhat cramped office he shares with fellow morning deejays Charlie Wilde, Karen Blake and Heather Gersten. Assistants and interns pop in and out — delivering messages, asking questions. Blake works at a computer, Wilde talks on the phone. Hatch sits in a corner, and takes just a moment to breathe.

The morning show, which begins at the ungodly hour of 5:30 a.m., has ended roughly a half-hour before our talk. In that 30-minute interim, Hatch has already done another interview. Once this chat is over, he'll be off to record a promo with his radio crew, and then out the door, off on yet another of the series of adventures his post-"Survivor" life has become. To hear Hatch tell it though, his current diversions — which range from radio to magazines to books to, possibly, a return to TV — are nothing more than just that: diversions.

"I didn't care, necessarily, about fame or any of this stuff [when I went on "Survivor"]. I felt pretty well grounded long before I ever got on the island. I think that's part of why I've been able to handle this pretty well.

"It's not meaningful to me ... it's all pretty much superficial crap. If the notoriety is gone tomorrow, I'm fine with that. If not, I'm fine with that, too. I'm enjoying what's happening, and though I could never have predicted it, it's not really overwhelming to me in any way."

Hatch joined the "Wilde Thing" show full-time on Jan. 30. How the whole thing came about is one of those serendipitous, coincidental tales that originates in (where else?) Los Angeles.

Richard Hatch discusses his career jump from survivor to radio co-host.

Hatch, who has no formal radio background, admits that he's still taking baby steps in his new venture.

"I met Charlie in L.A., when I was shooting 'Hollywood Squares,' " says Hatch, a tall, healthy-looking specimen that conjures up few images of the bearded, sunburned figure familiar to viewers of the first "Survivor." "He knew Linda Blair, who was on while I was on ... and we connected that way. And Charlie called me a number of times, and I did a couple spots on the radio.

"After the winning episode aired, I filled in on a radio show [in Rhode Island], and not long after that, the Star 93.7 program director, Ron Valeri, showed up in Newport and we began talks ... and here I am."

Hatch, who has no formal radio background, admits that he's still taking baby steps in his new venture. "I don't know anything technical, yet ... Heather, Karen and Charlie have an understanding of all that. I just babble and respond to what I'm hearing. It's easy so far. I'm sure it will be harder as I assume more responsibility, but right now, I'm just enjoying it."

Hatch stresses that his role on the "Wilde Thing" is not just that of a famous name providing some occasional pre-recorded bit. "I'm called

Quick-cooked root vegetables

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Is there a quick and easy way to cook root vegetables that also enhances their flavor? You can roast or bake them, of course, or boil and then mash them but I was looking for a quicker and easier method, a side dish which could be thrown together at the last minute. I also wanted a method which preserved the taste and texture of the vegetables without drying them out.

My first thought was to put together a variation on a stir-fry but without the Chinese flavorings. I cut the vegetables into small (1/2 by 1/2 by 2 inch) pieces and cooked them in a large skillet over high heat with oil. This worked fairly well but the vegetables became slightly dry and tough. I also tried potatoes, beets, and rutabagas cooked in this manner. The potatoes overcooked on the outside before the inside was tender, beets make a huge mess and overpower the other ingredients, and rutabagas are quite large and a bit difficult to cut into small pieces.

Carrots, turnips, and parsnips, however, worked well although each required a different amount of cooking time. (The carrots went in first, followed by the parsnips, and then the turnips.)

My next thought was to skip the stir-fry method and cook the vegetables over high heat with water, butter, salt, and sugar until the liquid reduced and created a nice glaze. The small amount of water steams/boils the vegetables and then, as the liquid evaporates, the pan is drier and the contents are sautéed. Now that I had plump, tender and browned vegetables I wanted to try and develop a couple of quick variations with lots of flavor. My favorite combination was equal amount of lime juice and honey — two tablespoons of each are added after the vegetables are cooked. I also developed a more traditional Asian variation with ginger, soy sauce, sherry, and sugar or maple syrup.

10-MINUTE ROOT VEGETABLES

You can use just one of the vegetables or any combination.

2 cups carrots cut into 1/2 by 1/2 by 2 inch sticks, about 2 medium
1 tablespoon unsalted butter
1 teaspoon sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 cup parsnip cut into 1/2 by 1/2 by 2 inch sticks, about 2 small
1 cup turnip cut into 1/2 by 1/2 by 2 inch sticks, about 1 small
Salt and freshly ground black pepper

Bring the carrots, butter, sugar, salt and 1/2 cup water to a boil over high heat in a large skillet for 2 minutes. Add the parsnips and cook an additional 2 minutes. Add the turnips and continue cooking, stirring about every minute until all of the liquid is evaporated and the vegetables are tender, browned, and shiny, about 6 minutes longer. Adjust seasoning with salt and freshly ground pepper and serve immediately. Serves 4 as a side dish.

LIME AND HONEY VARIATION

In a small bowl stir together 2 tablespoons fresh lime juice (from 2 limes) and 2 tablespoons honey. Once the vegetables are tender and browned, add the lime/honey mixture and cook, stirring constantly, for another 30 seconds or until the vegetables are evenly coated with the mixture which will be reduced to a glaze.

SOY-GINGER VARIATION

In a small bowl stir together 2 tablespoons soy sauce (light preferred) 2 tablespoons sherry and 1 tablespoon maple syrup or granulated sugar. Once the vegetables are tender and browned make a well in the center of the skillet. Add 1 tablespoon finely minced ginger and 1 teaspoon peanut or vegetable oil and mash with the back of a spatula or wooden spoon. Cook until fragrant, about 5 seconds and stir into vegetables. Add the soy mixture and cook, stirring constantly, until the vegetables are evenly coated and the mixture is reduced to a glaze, about 30 seconds longer.

Creating a garden with style

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Warm, balmy breezes, on a sun-drenched February morn, offered South Shore residents a glimmer of hope that springtime might soon come to pass, but frigid, gale force winds sent temperatures plummeting hours later, serving as a poignant reminder that patience is a necessity for gardeners in the northeast. Snow and ice continue to dominate our landscapes and gardeners must seek refuge in books, catalogs and magazines to satisfy their appetite for colorful flowers and the lush greenery of a garden in bloom.

The winter months are an ideal time to begin the process of creating a new garden plan or to modify an existing garden or landscape layout. Once the ground thaws and the soil can be tilled, gardeners tend to be overcome by spring fever which usually leads to impulse buying and designs which lack organization, balance or structure. The garden becomes merely a collection of plants rather than an attractive, creative plan. A seasoned gardener learns to focus on a particular theme or style to produce a specialty garden which facilitates the purchase of suitable plants to reinforce the design scheme.

Whether you are an experienced gardener or a fledgling dirt digger, your first priority is to analyze and evaluate your property, noting sun and soil conditions, drainage, and exposure to wind. While some of these existing conditions can be modified, to do so may require a considerable investment of time or money. For any garden to be successful, it is essential that its style, theme, and plants are suitable to the growing conditions found on your personal site.

The availability of light is perhaps the most critical aspect in choosing and developing a successful garden theme and is best judged once trees have leafed out in the spring. Observe your potential site every two to three hours, taking notes to determine how much light your area receives. As the days grow longer, the sun will be higher in the sky and most sites will receive considerably more sunlight as spring progresses unless large deciduous trees and shrubs cast shade. A site which receives morning sun and afternoon shade or dappled shade most of the day is considered shady; conversely, a site which receives morning shade and afternoon sun is usually classified as full sun. A garden located in full sun will enable you to grow the greatest diversity of flowering plants.

Selecting a style or theme for your garden requires considerable thought and research. Broad categories of garden themes might include perennial garden, cottage garden, sun or shade garden, formal garden, naturalistic garden, wildlife garden, or seasonal garden. A more specialized garden might evolve from any one of these general classifications. A perennial garden, for instance, might focus on a certain period (i.e. Victorian or Colonial), a specific color scheme (i.e. white, yellow, cool or warm) or a particular plant family (i.e. daylilies, hosta, roses or iris). A wildlife garden might concentrate on special wildlife visitors such as butterflies or hummingbirds. Each garden theme is bound to overlap another and many landscapes are likely to include multiple theme gardens.

A garden design should also be a reflection of a gardener's personal style and taste, just as each home has its own unique interior design. Most successful garden designs tend to match the style of the adjacent home. If your home has a formal appearance with symmetrically laid out foundation plantings, rectangular beds with straight edges will most likely suit your taste. A cottage garden, might be perfect alongside a country cape. In this style of garden, the emphasis is on bountiful color throughout the season using all types of plantings in beds, borders and containers. Large properties may lend themselves to one or more naturalistic plantings with the emphasis on native trees, shrubs and wildflowers as would be found in our local woodlands or wetlands. Somewhere in between formal borders and naturalistic landscapes are informal beds and borders with curved edges and irregular shapes which blend with nearly all types of architecture.

Browse through books and magazines and look for gardens which appeal to you and which might be suitable for your growing environment. If your property is predominantly shady, gardens which feature woodland wildflowers, perennials, hostas, ferns, astilbes and shade-loving trees and shrubs arranged in informal beds or naturalistic settings might be considered. A water garden or wildlife garden are alternative themes, many of the same plants being integral parts of any shade garden design. A shady spot, however, would be less than ideal for an herb garden or rose garden as these plants tend to be sun-lovers. Do your homework to ensure success.

Visit the Rhode Island Spring Flower and Garden Show from Feb. 15 to 18 at the Rhode Island Convention Center in Providence for an early glimpse of spring. Their theme, "Down the Garden Path," is sure to inspire and delight.

a co-host, and I'm in-studio as much as I can be. When I have to be away on other assignments, I'll call in from wherever I am."

Right now, one of Hatch's "other assignments" is his column for U.S. Weekly, The Hatch Report, which provides a weekly insight to something Hatch knows plenty about: "Survivor." The reigning champion delivers his opinions, observations and predictions each week about "Survivor: The Australian Outback," airing Thursday nights on CBS.

So far, Hatch's take on the second group of marooned strangers has been impressively perceptive. He was one of few analysts, for example, to predict that heavily favored Army intelligence officer Kel Gleason would be an early casualty. Hatch does admit, though, that he's surprised by much of what he's seen so far — particularly when addressing the question about whether the new cast has learned any lessons by watching the old.

"Absolutely not ... which shocks me. I'm surprised that these 16 people watched the show, listened to us talk about what we did, how we did it, why we did it ... and are making the same mistakes most of the other contestants made. It's unbelievable to me.

"I think that (the contestants) are not thinking clearly enough about what they're doing, or understanding themselves clearly enough to be responsible for how they're impacting the other people. All that anger, all that outspokenness, is inappropriate for a 'Survivor' winner," Hatch says.

Early on in the proceedings, Hatch favors Keith, Michael, Maralyn and Jeff among his possible winners, but also hastens "Don't bet on Rodger losing ... he's flying under the radar right now. I think he's sharp."

Hatch may be paid for his opinions on "Survivor," but don't look to him for insight on the other "reality" shows dominating the airwaves. "Haven't seen one," he remarks, matter-of-factly. "I haven't had time to pee, let alone watch 'The Mole' or 'Temptation Island'."

Hatch has recently been busy planning his own return to television, specifically, as the host of an imported English game show called "The Weakest Link," which NBC is producing.

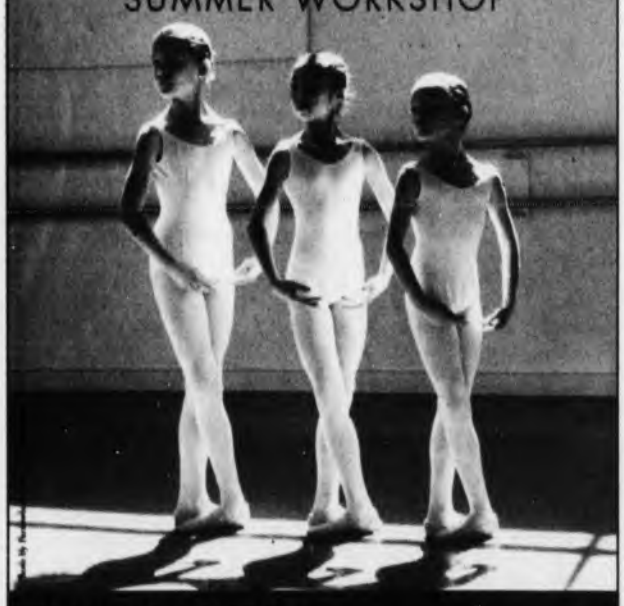
"It's a phenomenal show," says Hatch, getting visibly enthusiastic. "I imagine it will air in September. On the show, I fire questions at nine contestants, with the money value increasing gradually. After each round, though, the team votes one of their own off." He chuckles. "Doesn't that sound familiar? At the end, one winner takes away what everybody has earned."

Two versions of the show are reportedly being prepared — a primetime version for NBC, and a syndicated daytime version — with the English show's host, Anne Robinson, supposedly attached to the primetime. But, let it be said that Hatch didn't outwit, outplay, and outlast 15 other "Survivor" contestants without a healthy degree of confidence.

"There's more money in the syndicated one, so of course I wanted that," he half-jokes. "But, I haven't actually worked my magic on them yet, and I hopefully will be doing both. They just don't know that yet."

With all the success and fame that winning "Survivor" has brought, it's foster parent Hatch's involvement with a personal cause that has brought him the most satisfaction. "One of the most meaningful things that's come from all of it is my involvement with 'Horizon Bound,' an outdoor adventure program for troubled teens.

"It had been defunct for 10 or 12 years, but now I've incorporated a program under the same name. We hope to have a couple of groups of kids out [on activities] by this summer."



Richard Hatch appears to be a man with the world at his fingertips. But, with all the advantages and opportunities that lay before him, the most pleasant part of his success seems, to him, to be the freedom to do whatever — the journey, more than the destination itself. "Right now, I'm enjoying so many opportunities we'll see how they pan out, and where they lead me."

As he gets up, grabs his shoulder bag and is bustled out the door to the next meeting, the next appearance, the next...whatever, Hatch concludes, "My life changes daily. I feel like I'm an observer, and I watch and think and decide on a continual basis. So, who knows what's next?"

And, just like that, the tribesman has spoken. And he's gone.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 14

Stormy astrological weather continues. A Scorpio moon urges you to focus on the positives instead of getting caught up in worries, limited thinking. Let go of the past and of situations you have no control over. Keep your nose to the grindstone. Hard work will pay off. The Scorpio moon forms challenging alignments to Uranus, Mercury, Saturn. The moon becomes inactive at 10:23 p.m., when the last quarter phase occurs. Mars moves into Sagittarius at 3:06 p.m., remaining there until September 8. Mars will begin retrograde travel on May 11, when it reaches the last degree of Sagittarius.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 15

Planetary action turns around completely today. Storm clouds move out; sunny and mild astrological weather returns. The moon enters optimistic Sagittarius at 5:02 a.m. However, a lunar opposition to Jupiter in the morning warns against acting impulsively, overdoing on any level. Retrograde Mercury aligns with Uranus at 21-degrees of Aquarius. This combination may bring unexpected news or shed new light on matters. Keep an open mind. You can find new solutions to old problems.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 16

A Sagittarius moon continues to set the stage for an upbeat day. There are a couple of pitfalls, however. A lunar alignment to Pluto this morning may generate emotional fireworks. Think before you say or do something you will later regret. In addition, Mars prepares to oppose Jupiter, the planetary ruler of Sagittarius. Don't take chances or do anything risky. It is better to handle a variety of jobs rather than one that demands mental focus and concentration. Gather with friends and let the good times roll this evening.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17

An ebullient Sagittarius moon continues active travel until 2:22 p.m. This is a wonderful day for relaxing, enjoying favorite friends and pastimes. On the other hand, don't overdo or overextend; avoid making extravagant promises or purchases. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. A Capricorn moon takes over at 3:59 p.m.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 18

The sun moves into Pisces at 9:27 a.m., remaining there until March 20, when the Vernal Equinox arrives. The moon travels in Capricorn, prompting you to follow through on jobs that may have been left hanging in the past few days. You can be most productive. Get back on track with exercise and physical fitness routines. A polarity of Mars and Jupiter cautions you to channel high energy constructively. Know your limits.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 19

A Capricorn moon urges you to be more ambitious; tackle a busy agenda. Zero in on projects already begun and finish them; clean out desk drawers and closets, get rid of the clutter. Follow through on commitments and promises you have made to others. The moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn at 6:03 p.m. and becomes inactive. Plan a quiet evening.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 20

Planetary action points to an above-average day. The moon enters Aquarius at 4:53 a.m. and aligns with Jupiter and Mars in the morning. If you have a clear plan of action and stick to it, you can be most productive. Be open to new ideas and new ways of doing things. You can fix glitches, solve problems. A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Jupiter generates an optimistic mood but warns against overdoing, overextending. A lunar alignment to Neptune makes this an evening to kick back and mellow out completely.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 21

This is a wonderful day for vacationing. On the other hand, if you are working with others, you can be most effective. All team sports, community endeavors, group efforts get the green light. The moon continues to travel in freedom-oriented Aquarius and forms easy contacts to Venus, Pluto and Mercury. In addition, an applying alignment of the sun and Mars adds an energy boost but warns against fast driving, risk taking.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 22

Take it slow and easy this morning. Stay alert and use common sense. The Aquarius moon forms a challenging contact to Saturn at 7:18 a.m. and becomes inactive. A 90-degree alignment of the sun to Mars can spark arguments, power struggles, impulsive action. Others may be irritable, moody. The dark side of a new moon is a time for cleaning out, letting go, making way for new starts. Take extra quiet time out for yourself; reflect on and learn from past experiences. The moon enters Pisces at 5:45 p.m.

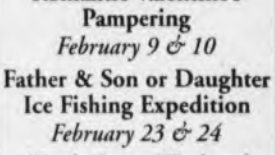
FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 23

The new moon culminates at 3:21 a.m., when the sun and moon conjoin at 5-degrees Pisces. The light side of a new moon brings a time for new beginnings. However, it is best to put new ventures on hold until Sunday, when Mercury turns direct. Because Mercury is slowing its rates of motion, the next couple of days may be hectic. Unexpected setbacks, breakdowns or changes in plans are likely. Slow down and pay extra attention to details.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24

The combination of a Pisces moon and applying Venus/Pluto alignment makes this day prime for creativity. You can find fresh inspiration and add new depth, dimension to artistic projects. Follow your intuition; your instincts are on target. Romance is in the air this evening. Spend quality time with the love in your life.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 25



The moon enters Aries at 5:20 a.m., and generates high energy and enthusiasm today and tomorrow. The big news, however, is that the planet Mercury turns direct at 10:41 a.m., and the green light goes on for new starts across the board. You can launch new ventures, make important decisions, purchases. A harmonious Mercury/Venus alignment makes this a time for meeting people, developing new friendships. Put on your party hat and let the good times roll tonight. The next

Cohasset hosts post-prom party

The fourth annual post-prom all-night party will be held at Cohasset High School June 1. Tentatively, the prom will be held at the Marriot Long Wharf in Boston. After the prom, the students will return to CHS for a night of fun. A live band, a casino and a breakfast are some of the events that are being planned.

An inclusive, chemical free all-night party for seniors has been very successful in many neighboring towns, including Hingham, Scituate, Hanover and Marshfield. Local police and organizations strongly support the idea in these towns as this all-night affair takes what may be a worrisome night and turns it into a safe and fun experience for prom-goers.

The ticket price will be $30 per attendee. Student tickets will not cover the entire evening. Donations are needed to make this event a success.

Please help support this event and send your donation to: Cohasset Post- Prom Party c/o Kay Langham, 100 Pond St., Cohasset, 02025.

If you would like to volunteer to help on the committee, please call Kay Langham, 383-2748 or Allison Ulmer, 383-2672.

Price tag for rail bed rises

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset may have received a big gift from the state this week when Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan said the MBTA would have to pay fair-market value when it takes the six-mile town-owned, railroad right-of-way as part of the Greenbush restoration project.

The town had been told in the past, particularly by former senior project manager Kevin Dasey, that under a 1991 bill, the MBTA was authorized by the Legislature to take all land needed for the Greenbush commuter rail right-of-way at no cost. But through train negotiations, the town and MBTA agreed to a $1 million payment in exchange for a "friendly" good-faith land taking of the long-dormant rail bed as part of Cohasset's mitigation package.

However, thanks to some investigative work by state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and lobbying by state representatives Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, and Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, Sec. Sullivan told Bradley, and later confirmed in a conversation with the Mariner, that the 1991 legislation only authorized the free land-taking of state-owned land.

"There had been an interpretation out there that the MBTA wasn't obligated to compensate the town for the land. But Sec. Sullivan said that is not how we are going to operate," said Executive Office of Transportation and Construction spokesman John Carlisle. "We're trying to still work in good-faith with the towns. Taking the land

Dasey departure worries town

MBTA senior project coordinator Kevin Dasey's exit in the middle of Greenbush mitigation talks not only resulted in the loss of a valued and respected negotiator, but also left a vacuum around whom the town should approach in order to continue to hammer out a deal.

To that end, selectmen met in a special Greenbush session last week during which they expressed concern about current developments.

"I'm nervous that any changes we ask for would bring us back to square one," Selectman Fred Koed said. He said when Dasey walked out the door, so did the entire negotiating history the town and MBTA had accumulated over the past two and a half years.

"It's a whole new game," agreed Mitigation Committee chairman Thomas Gruber, who has been one of the town's chief negotiators.

The MBTA said engineering and construction chief Eric Botterman would be the new point person for discussions surrounding the proposed commuter rail, and promoted Weymouth-native Jamie Jackson to project manager. But Cohasset selectmen were doubtful whether either would have the background knowledge or the authorization to make changes to the deal currently on the table.

The fine art of festival planning

Cohasset woman focuses on attention to detail

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It may only be mid-February but Diane Kennedy is thinking about June. And just like the rest of us – who pine for warmer temperatures right about now — she hopes June is sunny and not too hot.

But Kennedy's summer thoughts are focused on more than the weather. As coordinator of the Festival on the Common sponsored by the South Shore Art Center – that includes the celebrated art festival – Kennedy is in the midst of planning the details of the annual event set for June 15-17 that will bring upwards of 10,000 visitors to Cohasset Village.

"It's like planning a wedding. You get so wrapped up in the details and making sure that everything is filed in the right place that you ride on adrenaline."

— Diane Kennedy, art festival coordinator

It's her second year at the helm. Last year she and another resident, Debbie Flannagan, split the duties, an arrangement that provided the perfect initiation for Kennedy into a job that includes its share of stress associated with pulling together the signature event for the town. Potential headaches can range from parking and traffic to problems with tent rentals and electrical wiring – not to mention thunderstorms that can quickly clear out a crowd.

The art center has a trip down Memory Lane to thank for the fact that Kennedy, who grew up in Norwood, and her family moved to town.

It was two years ago that Kennedy and her husband, Patrick, an attorney, were heading back home from Washington, D.C. to live in the Boston area. As a girl, Kennedy spent summers in Scituate, so she talked her husband into taking a drive down to the South Shore.

"I wanted to see the Scituate lighthouse," the mother of two recalled. "We were driving down Forest Avenue and saw the ocean."

Cohasset's proximity to the sea and the town's love for the arts provided the perfect lure for the young family.

"I saw an article in the Mariner about the art festival, and thought, 'a town that does that has got to be good!'" recalls Kennedy, who lives on Jerusalem Road Drive.

Kennedy brings a natural enthusiasm to the art festival coordinator position along with a rich background in the arts. While in Washington, the Wheaton College

The heart of the matter

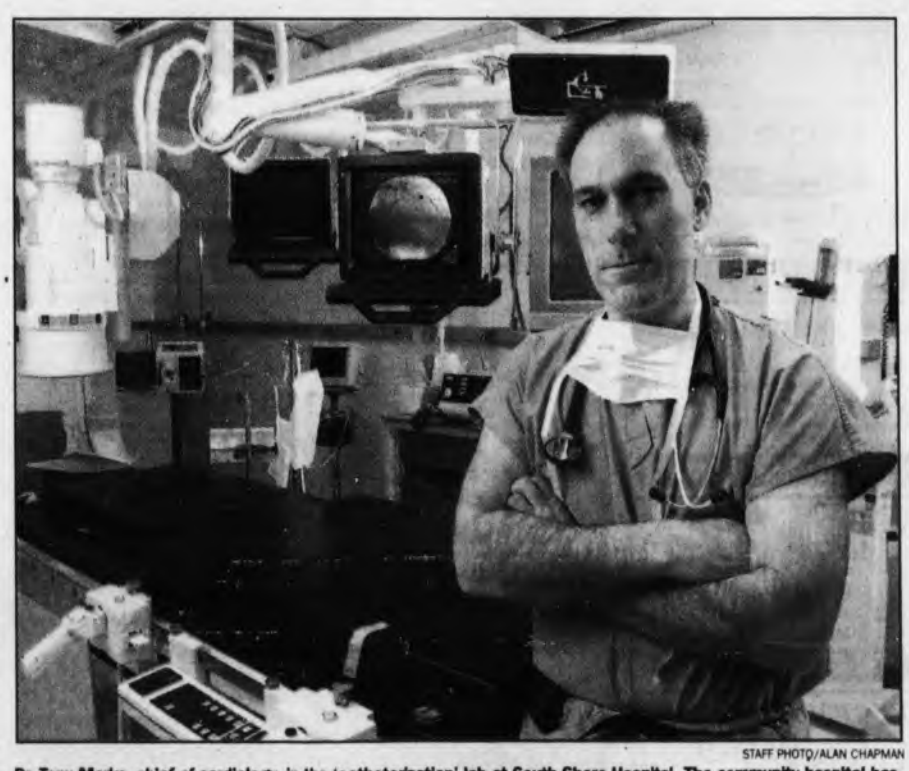
Hospital awaits word on surgery application

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

Physicians on staff at South Shore Hospital can tell you if an artery to your heart is blocked, but they can't perform the surgical procedures often required to fix this-life threatening problem.

Patients rushed to the Weymouth hospital with chest pains can be treated medically and stabilized but then must travel farther by ambulance or Medflight to a Boston hospital if heart surgery is required to save their lives.

"It's a long trip into Boston, even with lights and sirens," said Anthony Marks, chief of cardiology at South Shore Hospital.



Door to door, a patient could wait a minimum of 90 minutes before receiving treatment in Boston and that can add up to more heart muscle damage along the way, he said.

Marks and others at the hospital want to change that by offering open heart surgeries including heart by-passes and angioplasty procedures — where a catheter with a balloon is used to break through heart blockages — at the community hospital.

Like nearly every community hospital across the state, South Shore Hospital does not have a license to perform open heart surgery. Community hospitals in the 49 other states already do the procedures that the Massachusetts Department of Public Health has restricted to Boston's teaching hospitals

All of that could change next year if the DPH approves the hospital's application to begin open heart surgery service. The DPH is reviewing applications from six community hospitals, including

Stress on watershed subject of workshop

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Most think of the word "taxed" in relationship to bills people must pay to government, but members of the Hingham Water Resources Task Force hope to bring a whole new meaning to the word.

The Weir River Watershed that provides water for about 38,000 people living in Hingham, Hull, Norwell and north Cohasset is taxed in both its capacity to provide a stable public water supply and its ability to maintain adequate habitat for aquatic wildlife, according to a state watershed resources study.

The results of the study — that officials promise will be explained in layman's terms — will be the focus of a meeting at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at Hingham Town Hall on Central Street.

A watershed is the land area that drains to a body of water, such as a stream, river, pond or the ocean.

"The study shows that during times of high water usage, we're taking more out of the watershed than we should," says Jeffrie Bettinger, chairman of the Hingham task force.

What's happening, as a result, is the downstream ecology is suffering and could ultimately have an impact on the quality of life.

"Some say, 'good there will be no more mosquitoes,'" said Bettinger facetiously. "But the potential impact is on the open space that borders the rivers — the trees and plants." Low-flow conditions also affect fish that must compete for diminished living space, dissolved oxygen and food supply.

"The study shows that during times of high water usage, we're taking more out of the watershed than we should."

— Jeffrie Bettinger, chairman of the Hingham task force.

Norwell pumps water from four wells in the upper portion of the watershed. Massachusetts American Water Company, which supplies Hingham and Hull and north Cohasset, withdraws exclusively from the Weir River watershed and accounts for up to 85 percent of water withdrawals, according to the report.

The report states that existing demand exceeds the minimum acceptable threshold — or "Aquatic Habitat Safe Yield" for the entire 20-square-mile Weir River basin — by 59 percent. In 20 years, forecasts are the demand will exceed the minimum acceptable threshold by 82 percent.

Bettinger said the state report is a tool that should be used by the region to come up with solutions.

"It's a start," he said about the report providing the impetus for what it calls "stakeholders" to work together.

He explained that the state is not going to use the report as a cudgel over the region to force conservation.

"They're not going to say, 'you're taking too much water out and have to stop,'" he said. Bettinger said the state would leave it up to the stakeholders to determine what they are willing to do to protect the watershed.

The state commissioned the study conducted by environmental consulting firm, GZA, through the Department of Environmental Management. It purpose was to develop a model of the watershed including water sources and withdrawals as well as the ecological system dependent on the watershed. The goal of the study "is to tell us how much water can be removed from the watershed system, while still maintaining the ecology of the downstream areas," Bettinger said.

At the Feb. 28 meeting GZA, the DEM and the task force will be on hand to discuss the study and present recommendations.

Samantha Woods of the Weir River Watershed Association encourages participation in the meeting.

"There is plenty of water but at what expense?," she asked. "The water that supplies our drinking water is also the water that supplies surface waters like the Weir River and its associated ponds.

"Flow in the river is already impacted, according to the report, and further withdrawals have the potential to exacerbate that situation. Citizens should be concerned because this could affect planning for future growth of the town(s) and how to supply that growth with drinking water."

She said citizens can help by becoming informed about the issue and, if necessary, changing water-use behavior.

Bettinger of the Hingham task force said he considers the report's findings to be serious.

"One reason I came to this town in addition to the excellent schools and public services, is the great park areas and open space," he says. "The town is near the city, but it's country.

"But we're going to lose that if we don't pay attention."

Bradley hold office hours

State Rep. Garrett Bradley will hold district office hours this Friday, Feb. 2, in Cohasset. He will be available at the Stop & Shop, public meeting room, 400 Chief Justice Cushing Highway, from 4 to 5:30 p.m.

If you are unable to attend but would like to meet with the representative, call (617) 722-2800 ext. 7315 to schedule an appointment at your convenience.

Hotel room tax

This fall, the town could mull over whether to reinstitute the local occupancy tax on hotel rooms in Cohasset. Town Manager Mark Haddad brought up the issue at Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting, after being sent a letter about the issue from the state Department of Revenue.

In 1988, Town Meeting voted to tack on a 4 percent tax to hotel rentals in town. It was revoked in 1989. Now, with the expansion of the Red Lion Inn, coupled with Kimball's By the Sea, Haddad said the town could raise an additional $32,000 annually be bringing back the 4 percent tax.

It's too late to bring it up for the March 31 Annual Town Meeting, but selectmen said it could be brought up at a fall special town meeting.

Thermal imaging unit update

The Cohasset volunteer firefighters' effort to raise enough money to purchase the town a thermal imaging goggles received some support from interim water commissioner, and cemetery and veterans ommittees member Glenn Pratt.

Pratt told selectmen Tuesday that the town should "step up" and cover the remaining $10,000 needed to buy the goggles. "I think it's time your board and the taxpayers to step up and buy this lifesaving piece of equipment," he said.

The call-firefighters have raised $10,000, and a recent grant added $12,000 to that total.

Selectmen asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to see if the $10,000 could be absorbed into the budget somehow.

Town parking lot

One of the mitigation items the town is poised to receive from the MBTA is the construction of a new and expanded parking lot.

At least week's informal selectmen's meeting on the proposed mitigation package, discussion included counting spaces that would be lost along the right-of-way when the train comes.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen Tuesday that town Building Commissioner Robert Egan counted 55 cars parked along the right-of-way last week. The MBTA plans on adding 69 spaces to the new town lot.

Summer jobs

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund announced that this year's recruitment program for summer positions within the Department of Environmental Management and the Metropolitan District Commission is underway.

Anyone interested in applying for these seasonal positions should contact Sandra Dalton at the District office located at 66 Sea St., North Weymouth, MA 02191. (781) 340-9866 to obtain a referral form.

The seasonal positions that are available include lifeguards, clerks, summer workers and laborers for MDC and DEM swimming pools, campgrounds and picnic/swimming areas.

To ensure that these facilities are staffed and seasonal personnel are adequately trained, completed forms must be received before Friday, March 30.

Permitting in-house apartments on agenda

ebate begins er Town eeting articles

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

ough the groundhog has called six more weeks of winter — sure sign that spring is coming ne sound of residents arguing Town Meeting warrant arti-

though the debates have not ed to boil, Cohasset selectmen ed off the season last Tuesday n they brought in a number of town's boards to go over pro- ed articles.

s of press time, there were 34 les — or items of business ed to be discussed at the March Town Meeting — ranging from roving the town's $23 million rating budget, to zoning nges, to adding a new bylaw rding floor drains.

lectmen and the town isory Committee attach their mmendations to the warrant residents to take into consider- n when voting.

anning Board Chairman Al ore, with Zoning Board of eals Chairman Woody Chittick Town Planner Liz Harrington ing on, explained his board's posed zoning changes.

ne change would allow acces- dwellings or "in-law apart- nts" by special permit in resi- tial homes. Two-family resi- ces are currently prohibited in asset, although some home- ers particularly in the veterans of town, created in-law apart- nts before the town's zoning s ruled them out.

ne addition of legal accessory llings, said Harrington, could er provide additional money financially strapped seniors, or te additional senior housing out actually building a new cture.

ne permit would come with 18 ditions such as the accessory elling can't be more than 25 cent of the house's floor area, or feet, whatever is less, and the licant for the permit would e to be a live-in owner. Only 10 e-year permits would be avail- each year.

lectman Ronnie McMorris ested that half of the permits n be set aside for seniors.

Moore said he didn't know how great the demand would be, but didn't doubt that accessory dwellings already exist illegally, just "under the town's radar."

One change would rezone the Hagerty Property from light industrial to open space. Seven years after it purchased the water-front lot, the town is finally ready to build the long-planned public parking lot and boat ramp at the site. Rezoning would prevent attempts to use the site for commercial enterprises. Last summer Cohasset Lobster Pound owners Tommy Alioto and Chris DiNatale were interested in leasing out part of the space for a new lobster shop. The plan was eventually nixed, but as a result, the move began in earnest to see the property rezoned.

The permit would come with 18 conditions such as the accessory dwelling can't be more than 25 percent of the house's floor area, or 900 feet, whatever is less.

The matter was scheduled to be on one of last fall's town meetings, but was pulled off when the planning board had some concerns about whether the change had been properly researched. Now, the planning board is ready to move forward.

"We thought it had been thrown together quickly, and wanted to be careful," Moore said. "Now we're comfortable."

Selectmen voted to recommend both articles.

Chittick was next in the hot seat to lobby for the ZBA's four articles. One article would change wording in a bylaw that prohibits fences taller than five feet, to six feet. Chittick said a Town Meeting vote had authorized the change a number of years ago, but the "wording was never changed."

Another article would "clarify" the wording of a zoning bylaw regarding waterfront properties, by changing "The land is not subject to flooding or wave damage, nor is unsuitable because of drainage conditions" to "The proposed use is not subject to damage by flooding or waves, nor is unsuitable because of drainage conditions."

Chittick said under old regulations, a house could be denied a permit because its shoreline 50 feet away had some erosion, for example. The new language would allow the permit, as long as the proposed use, isn't affected by flooding or wave damage.

A third zoning bylaw change would increase the required distance between a driveway and a property line. Selectmen had some concern over this article because of the popularity of split driveways in town. Also, selectmen questioned a zoning bylaw change that would prohibit the storage or display of commercial goods, products, materials or equipment on property lines. Selectmen questioned if this would prohibit fishermen from storing their boats in their yards too close to property lines. Moore said it would, but Chittick said they would insert some language to protect boat storage. Selectmen held off on approving either of those two articles.

Sewer Commission Chairman Gary Vanderweil explained two of the three articles his board has proposed. One article asks the town to approve $200,000 study to see if the Central Cohasset wastewater treatment plan could expand. The commission recently completed a feasibility study of Little Harbor to see if it would be possible to sewer the area. One of the study's conclusions suggested the expansion of Central Cohasset plant from its current capacity level of 300,000 gallons per day, to 450,000 gallons a day.

Vanderweil said though the town couldn't afford to start any further expansion within the next five years, he would like to "lay the groundwork" for expansion. That would include, he said, seeing just how much the plant's capacity could be enlarged; the effect of additional wastewater discharge into Cohasset Harbor; and other environmental aspects. The article, which also has the support of the Board of Health, will be recommended by selectmen.

Another article would give the sewer commission $30,000 to study the water flow of the existing plant, and buy new measurement gauges.

Town election slate set

Two races to highlight ballot

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

With the filing deadline past, the 17 candidates that returned 100 certified signatures have been put on the ballot for the 15 available positions.

Ripley Road resident, and former selectman, Peter Pratt was a late entrant into the fray as he threw his hat into the race for Planning Board.

He will face off against Richard Brown for the five-year seat. Current member Terry Atherton declined to seek reelection.

"I think it's time to take a serious look at an overall strategic plan, and to look at growth and developmental issues facing the town," Pratt said recently.

The announcement ends a four-year hiatus from elected office for Pratt. From 1984-1987, Pratt was a town water commissioner, and then served on the Board of Selectmen from 1994-1997. He has also been involved in the local environmental group SAFE, and has been an outspoken opponent of the current plan to restore diesel-engine train service to the Greenbush corridor.

The other race will see Adrienne McCarthy try to unseat either school committee incumbent Mark DeGiacomo, or committee chairman Pat Martin. DeGiacomo and Martin are the first school committee members to seek reelection since 1994. McCarthy has been involved in the Osgood School PSO, and a critic of the board's decision to cut the Osgood School's technology aide position last year.

Last week, retired state representative and former three-term selectman Mary Jeanette Murray said she won't be running for one of the two available selectmen seats – this year.

Selectman Chairman Thomas Callahan and three-term incumbent Merle Brown are running unopposed.

On the ballot are, current Paul Pratt Library trustees June Hubbard, Sarah Pease and Barbara Power, Board of Health Chairman Stephen Bobo, Water Commissioner Robert Kasameyer, Cohasset Housing Authority member John Muncey and Board of Assessors member Elsa Miller. Interim Water Commissioner Glenn Pratt is running to fill the year left on his term. Pratt replaced Chip Muncey, who resigned January 1.

Sean Cunning will be on the ballot for Sewer Commissioner, and Atlantic Avenue resident Fred Grassie, another late entrant, is up for a spot on the Recreation Commission.

Gene Haley had taken out papers to run for library trustee, but did not file.

Town Elections will be Sat. April 7, at Town Hall.

Editor's note: candidates, both unopposed and opposed, are welcome to submit announcements of their candidacies with a photograph. Next week, the Mariner will announce the first Question of the Week, with responses printed in the following week's issue. Candidates are also welcome to submit news of upcoming coffees and the like, for candidates corner. Those items should be limited to 150 words. The Mariner will not accept letters endorsing or attacking candidates, but welcomes letters on the issues.

Roy seeks representation on the harbor committee

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset Harbor's biggest employer and largest private landholder is looking for representation on the town Harbor Committee.

Margin Street resident, and owner of Atlantica Restaurant, Kimball's Hotel, and the Mill River Marine Railway site, Peter Roy, is looking to have say in what goes on the harbor.

In a letter sent to Town Manager Mark Haddad, Roy contends that "significant interests on the harbor...do not have representation." The Harbor Committee, by by-law, has seats for a representatives from the sailing club, yacht club, recreation department, historic commission, the harbormaster, two seats for town lobstermen and two citizens-at-large.

Roy said, if the town's 30 lobstermen are represented by two seats on the board, then the Atlantica Restaurant, which has 100 employees during peak season from April to November, Kimball's, which employs 50 people during that same time, and the Mill River Marine Railway, should have at least one seat.

"The above interests, currently unrepresented on the committee, by virtue of their size and impact (on the citizens of Cohasset, employees, visitors and fishermen), their economic value to the town, the public access and support services to the marine interests, seem to warrant representation on the committee," Roy said.

Roy representative Linda Shropshire has been a familiar face at harbor committee meetings for the past year, and said either Roy or another representative would take the seat, if offered. Shropshire isn't a Cohasset resident and couldn't sit on the committee.

However, selectmen seemed reluctant to allowing the dominant business interest on the waterfront to have a say on its governing body.

"I'm concerned about Peter Roy serving on a town board, while going through with a number of private development projects," Selectman Chairman Thomas Callahan said.

Roy is a prime backer in the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, which is mulling over a number of landscape changes to the harbor, such as the creation of a promenade around the harbor. Also, the Mill River Marine Railway is currently involved with the permitting process to renovate the dilapidated marine site, add residential units and a kayak rental and sales shop.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris doubted if businesses should be represented on town committees.

Callahan said technically fishermen are businesses, but their businesses are water-dependent, and though Atlantica and Kimball's are on the water, they aren't water dependent.

Selectman Merle Brown said if Roy was interested in a seat, it should be given as a citizen-at-large seat. But Callahan hoped the citizen-at-large seats could be filled by town residents with no formal connections to the harbor, other than the harbor as a town-wide resource.

The harbor committee's representation is set in the town bylaws. Any change to the representation would have to be approved through a Town Meeting vote.

Selectmen said Roy was welcome to bring the issue up at a future Town Meeting.

A tribute for a tribute

Video honors Jason brothers for work on light keepers memorial

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

As premier screenings go, the debut of Peter Whitfield's video tribute to Herb and Kenny Jason of Cohasset for their tribute to the two men who lost their lives keeping the first Minot Ledge Light, was pretty tame.

There was no red carpet stretched along Scituate's Bulrush Farm Road and there were no limousines dropping off celebrities in tuxedos and high-priced designer gowns.

Still, Whitfield who wrote, directed and filmed and narrated the 38-minute video, and his wife Barbara put out a nice spread for the intimate group gathered for the very first screening of "A Light That Fell."

The documentary piece chronicling the Jason brothers' crusade to build a monument to honor assistant Minot Ledge Light keepers Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson, took Whitfield more than a year to complete. It will air on local cable access channel 10 tonight (Feb. 22) and tomorrow night (Feb. 23) at 6 p.m.

A long-time member and trustee of the Scituate Historical Society, Whitfield has made videography his part-time career since retirement from the textile industry 12 years ago. Whitfield got his start in the filming biz working behind the scenes for former cable talk show host Wigmore Pierson. Pierson's popular "Pierson to Person" program, which ended its 10-year run on local cable June 1997, covered everything from town government officials and election races to the local color and characters that make up the fabric of the South Shore.

Life-long Cohasset lobsterman Herb Jason and his brother Kenny were two of the local characters that Pierson's show introduced to Whitfield.

"I was just so impressed with them both," said Whitfield. "They're just two of the nicest, most caring guys."

But what impressed Whitfield more than the Jasons' good nature, was their unfailing dedication and commitment to building a monument to two fallen assistant lighthouse keepers. "I got involved with it because of Herb, and because I admired what he was trying to do. And, I thought it would be one heck of a story to tell."

In his 70 years as a lobsterman, Herb Jason rounded Minot Ledge Lighthouse thousands of times and reflected each trip about the two men, who lost their lives "keeping a good light" 150 years ago this April 17. Antoine and Wilson manned the first, metal structured lighthouse over dangerous Minot Ledge. During a nor'easter on the night of April 17, the poorly constructed lighthouse which was known to sway two feet of center, back and forth in the Atlantic swells, succumbed to the waves, claiming the lives of both men. A letter in a bottle discovered after the tragedy showed the men knew the structure would not make it through the night.

Nearly a century and a half later, the compelling story would motivate Herb Jason to push for a Government Island monument to honor the two men.

"This is really a tribute to four men," said Whitfield of his video. "The two men that died manning the lighthouse, and the two that saw to it that they will never be forgotten."

Whitfield's folksy film covers the process the two Jasons went through to get the impressive monument built, including their negotiations with Cohasset town officials, and actual work in designing and helping to construct the memorial. A good portion of the spring ceremony in which the monument was dedication was also filmed.

But beyond its purpose as a tribute, Whitfield's video provides a historical look at both the maritime heritage of Cohasset while telling the story of the construction of the doomed lighthouse. Cohasset town historian David Wadsworth and Doug Bingham of the American Lighthouse Foundation both share their insights in the film.

Archive photography provided by maritime museums in Scituate, Cohasset and Hull was woven into the video.

Whitfield said favorable reviews have been coming in since the private screening Friday.

"Several folks there Friday said they had tears in their eyes," Whitfield noted. And the bear hug he received from Herb Jason when the film ended spoke volumes to the amateur film maker.

"I reached my goal," Whitfield said of the finished project.

But Whitfield is far from wrapping up his video career. Whitfield has completed four of the six videos for the exhibits in Scituate's Maritime and Irish Mossing Museum. Along with fellow historical society trustee Fred Freitas, Whitfield is currently working on the video footage for the museum's impressive ship building room.

And while he was the force behind his video tribute "A Light That Fell," Whitfield is quick to thank those that lent a hand including George Bearch who filmed segments when Whitfield was doing interviews. "When I was on 'mic', George was behind the camera," he said. Whitfield also says thanks to AT&T program director Lisa Reddie who helped Whitfield during the 20 hours of editing needed for the 38-minute video. . "She pushed all the buttons for me," Whitfield joked. "I was lucky to have her working with me on this."

The Government Island monument honoring Minot Ledge Light keepers Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson was unveiled in May and is now part of a video to be aired on cable channel 10.

EDITORIAL

A case for cardiac surgery

There are several significant and overriding reasons why South Shore Hospital should be granted a license to perform cardiac surgery in Weymouth.

• First, and foremost, the hospital has a proven track record on succeeding and being a leader in medical procedures, the fairly recent development of the neo-natal facility standing out as a fine example.

• The hospital is in a financial position to take on the challenge, thanks to responsible fiscal planning.

• The need exists on the South Shore to treat a growing demographic in more need of cardiac care.

• It is already affiliated with the top-notch Brigham and Women's cardiac team

Then of course there's the personal reasons. You can talk to countless people on the South Shore who often relay personal and intimate stories about themselves, their parent, spouse, sibling or friend who has been in cardiac distress and in need of medical attention beyond what can now be found at South Shore Hospital.

Talk to them, read their letters sent to the hospital and understand what they have been through. It is sure to convince you a cardiac surgery unit needs to be closer than the 90-minute harrowing ride in to Boston. These people didn't have a choice when the cardiac crisis reached a threatening point and precious seconds meant a lifetime.

It's hard not to be convinced they need and should have top-notch doctors and medical team here on the South Shore ready to perform routine procedures such as angioplasty or something more invasive such as cardiac surgery.

It's also hard not to be convinced the South Shore Hospital leaders are prepared and serious about making those options available right here. They take this business seriously and know how critical the need is on the South Shore.

As a community, we need to rally behind the efforts of hospital officials to secure one of three licenses expected to be awarded around March 1 by the state Department of Public Health. The hospital is one of six community hospitals in the state applying for one the three licenses.

We urge residents to join the chorus of voices who have weighed in their support to bring cardiac surgery to the South Shore. We need to send a strong message to state leaders that it is time to expand cardiac surgery beyond the big city hospital in Boston. Massachusetts is the last state to limit what community hospitals can provide in terms of cardiac treatments.

There's little logic in denying the license when community hospitals have a track record of providing exceptional care, its chief doctors already serve in rotations at the Brigham, and the hospital has carefully laid out its medical and financial plan.

You can help bring open heart surgery to South Shore Hospital by expressing your support in a letter. Write to Gov. Paul Cellucci, Office of the Governor, Statehouse, Boston 02133 or to the state Department of Public Health, 250 Washington St., Boston 02108

We need to make it clear we welcome and encourage our medical staff at South Shore Hospital and want immediate access to the full range of cardiac services.

Join the chorus

Send your letter supporting open heart surgery on the South Shore by writing:

• Gov. Paul Cellucci, Office of the Governor, Statehouse, Boston 02133

•Joyce James, Director, Department of Need Program, Department of Public Health, 250 Washington St., Boston 02108

• Dr. Howard Koh, state Commissioner of Public Health, 250 Washington St., Boston 02108

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Train disbelief

TO THE EDITOR:

It is with sadness and disbelief that I witness the progress of the Greenbush Diesel Train project. The supporters and advocates of this highly impactive, expensive and inappropriate choice for transportation enhancement must be blind to, or disinterested in the price our communities will ultimately pay. Our children most especially, who now roam freely from one end our communities to the other, by foot and bicycle are at great risk for injury and death. Who will the first victim be. Very likely we will all be acquainted with him or her. Very likely it will be a child or teenager. This train will be barreling through and crossing over parts of our town which have in the past 50 years been established very close to the rail bed. Our school bus stops are dangerously close to the proposed crossings. This is a terrible step backward. I hope our new Governor will be receptive to ideas that have been ignored by her predecessor. A monorail using the Route 3 corridor has been proposed. Leave our communities alone to continue to grow as a community of people. We do not want these Federal dollars to be spent in this way. We do not want to give up our way of life, our safety, or our health. Please put Diesel Trains where they belong, in the past; not in our future.

Heartfelt thanks

TO THE EDITOR:

Last November your publication reported on the loss of our home due to a fire. We would like to thank the members of the Cohasset Fire Department who put their lives at risk in an effort to contain and minimalize the damage to our home. Despite their best efforts, our home was lost. We are grateful also to the Scituate Fire Department for their assistance that evening.

Since the time of the fire many donations have been made to the fund established on our behalf at the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank. To those who have contributed to the fund, we thank you from the bottom of our hearts. Our daughter, Ariel, would like to thank all those who donated clothing and gave her Beanie Babies to help rebuild her collection that was lost in the fire.

We have been moved by the generosity of members of the Cohasset Community, many of whom are anonymous or unknown to our family. The display of compassion by individual members of town government has reaffirmed our belief that Cohasset is a community that we are proud to be a part of.

Again, thank you to everyone for your continued support and kindness since our devastating loss.

Abortion rights

TO THE EDITOR:

One cannot watch TV today without running headlong into a "for God and Country" type NARAL ad sanctifying abortion rights.

This costly ad is thought provoking and like a punch line of old "Where's the beef?" one feels the urge to add "Where's the baby?"

The clever defenders and promoters in NARAL may well know the principles of eternal divine law, natural law, civil law, church laws and the laws of reason. All these laws involve self-denial, self-control and obedience. NARAL's message, however, seeks to excuse one from obeying the eternal principles by using sentimental and emotional alibis. Let us not change our principles to justify our actions.

POLITICAL NOTES

Rep. Bradley stance on Clean Election Law

Freshman state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, said this week he will uphold his campaign pledge to keep the teeth in the voter-passed Clean Election Law, but with a twist.

Though Bradley said he won't vote to "gut" the law, which was supported by nearly two-thirds of Massachusetts voters in 1998, he also won't opt into the plan.

"The voters in my district and throughout the commonwealth have spoken on the Clean Election Law. I think it is time the legislature acts to implement it without changes that would weaken it," he said in a release this week. "I gave my word on the campaign that I would not vote to weaken the law and I intend to keep my word."

But the Election Laws Committee member added that he personally is against using taxpayer's dollars to finance a campaign, and won't participate in the plan.

"That's not the issue at hand," he said. "The issue is a law that was passed by two-thirds of the state and for the legislature to try an end run around the law [by making changes and adding amendments to it] is wrong."

Bradley spent more than $125,000 in his attempt to replace long-time state representative Mary Jeanette Murray. Under the Clean Election Law, a candidate couldn't spend more than $30,000 over a two-year election cycle. The law is supposed to take effect March 31.

Interestingly, despite his personal bias against the law, Bradley has the backing of David Donnelly, one of the people behind the 1998 ballot question. "[Bradley] heard the message sent by his constituents to implement clean elections, and now he is working with us to make this giant step toward better democracy, and in turn, better government," Donnelly said.

Bradley said he, as does Donnelly, supports the technical corrections bill that is up for debate next week. The bill, filed by the Secretary of State's office, would make minor change such as adjusting the amount a candidate can spend to take into account inflation.

Bradley can be reached at his new office in the Committee on Governmental Regulations, Room 437, or at (617) 722-2800.

Cormorants - skilled fish-eaters

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Cormorants are slim, dark and snaky-necked. Their eyes are a startling brilliant aqua blue color and are adapted to see in either air or water. Most have bare skin around the mouth that can be red, orange, yellow or blue, depending on the species. They have fully webbed feet used to propel their sleek bodies through the water. They catch their food under water, but bring it to the surface to eat. They swallow fish headfirst, regurgitating as pellets the indigestible parts, such as bones or fish scales. In some parts of the world they are highly valued for the huge amounts of guano they produce.

Cormorants are the birds one frequently sees standing with their wings spread out. There is some debate over the true purpose of this so-called "spread-wing posture". It used to be thought that feathers became waterproofed when preened with oil from a special gland at the base of the tail. Instead it turns out that feather structure, not oiling, provides waterproofing. Thus the fact that cormorants do not have an oil gland is not the reason their feathers get wet. The structure of their outer feathers allows saturation with water. The weight of this extra water decreases buoyancy, which is helpful while diving, but these "wettable" feathers then require drying out. In addition to drying the wings, other reasons for "spread-wing posture" have been suggested. Regulating temperature, making it easier to remove parasites, increasing Vitamin D absorption, or exhibiting some sort of social display are a few of the possibilities.

There are six North American species of cormorants, but only two are found in Massachusetts. Double-crested Cormorants are here in the summer and during migration, with a few remaining all winter. Both the bill and the adjoining bare skin area are yellow. They actually have two little crests on their head, but these are almost never seen. They nest in colonies, sometimes on the ground and sometimes in trees, but each colony has only one type of nest. The Great Cormorant is a winter visitor here. Although it too has a yellow bill and small yellow bare patch, the primary field marks are its white throat patch and white hip patches. This species usually nests on rocky sea cliffs, not in trees. The Anhinga is not a cormorant even though it looks very similar. It is found in Florida and belongs to the darter family, which has only one species in North America.

Indeed they are very "old" birds, as shown by the fossilized remains found in Florida, which are estimated to be more than two million years old.

DDT was a large factor in reducing the numbers of cormorants drastically in the 1950s. Since 1980, however, there has been a steady increase in numbers. Fishermen have long been suspicious that cormorants steal their fish and are a threat to sport and commercial fishing. A variety of studies over many years, however, have shown that cormorants generally do not take sport or commercial fish as their primary food. That story may be changing now that fish farming is increasing. Large concentration of fish in small areas provides easy fishing for birds. Cormorants are known to be very fond of alewives and herring as well. Where some of these species are becoming endangered, and where the population of cormorants is exploding, there may be some justification for considering population control programs.

For some observers, cormorants suggest dinosaurs. Indeed they are very "old" birds, as shown by the fossilized remains found in Florida, which are estimated to be more than two million years old, according to Peter Steven in an article published in the June 1997 issue of Birders' World. He suggests that a type of red tide alga may have killed those birds, in the same way it causes problems in shellfish today.

Since ancient times, Asian fishermen have used trained cormorants for fishing. Tying a string with just the right tightness around their necks ensures that they swallow only the smallest fish. The birds easily learn to bring larger fish back to the boat. Today this practice is used more as a tourist attraction than commercially.

In the summer, look for Double-crested Cormorants swimming or diving in harbor waters, or perhaps perched on rocks or buoys. During the winter months, the best place to find Great Cormorants is on the very large rocks off North Scituate. Whether you spend time watching "bald ravens" as the Greeks called them, or "sea crows" which is the translation from a variety of Romance languages, or "shags" as many fishermen call them, or just plain cormorants, you will witness some remarkable fishing ability.

Generally excellent lack of wisdom

MY VIEW

RICK COLLINS

Last week I had a couple of my wisdom teeth out.

(Pause as readers make their own jokes)

The question I had going into it was, do those troublesome molars in the sub-regions of one's mouth actually control a person's wisdom, or is it a misnomer, like it's severely unfunny cousin the funny bone? "It can't be true," I said to myself, as I took the last drive I ever would with all 32 teeth in my head. "Why would a simple chunk of dentin and enamel control whether I'm destined to be a Horace Greeley or a mere pretty-boy forced to get by on his good looks as an evening news anchor person?"

The teeth were pulled, the bill was paid, and the tears were dried.

"Why would a simple chunk of dentin and enamel control whether I'm destined to be a Horace Greeley or a mere pretty-boy forced to get by on his good looks as an evening news anchor person?"

But I still had some doubts. After all, haven't we all been shocked and surprised before? The impossible happened? The foundation of our beliefs shaken and shattered much like a Californian freeway during an earthquake?

This wasn't the right time for me to lose my edge. Just two weeks ago the Mariner won the General Excellence contest in the New England Press Association awards. "I'm a generally excellent reporter after all, with the certificate to prove it," I lamented, waiting for the Advil to kick in. "I need to stay on top!"

I got through the weekend with a minimum of whining, and started to put the question out of my mind.

But on Monday I started to have my doubts again. I pulled into the Tedeschi's in the village and while waiting in line to buy my Fresca, I spotted a well-dressed man, in his early to mid 40s buying a TV Guide. I knew I should know him, so I went up to him and heard myself say, "Excuse me, aren't you the most controversial guy in Cohasset?"

He looked at me as the clerk rang up the TV Guide and said, "Why, no, I'm Peter Roy. You must have me confused with Mark Haddad."

Hmm...That's not good. A certain fear arose that made me rethink what had happened. "This can't happen right now," I said out loud, scaring a mother and her young daughter so bad they nearly fell off the 2-inch high curb.

"Town elections are coming up! Tom Brown and Merle Callahan are seeking reelection and they don't need a dim-witted reporter covering it," I thought as I got into my cherry red Mustang.

I began to think of all the issues swirling around this bucolic land-locked town. "Ah Peter Roy," I finally remembered. "He's the one that founded the non-profit group that wants to bring back the commuter train, pollute the town, and build an amusement park along Cohasset Harbor."

Everything started to rush back to my memory. "State Sen. Garrett Hedlund, D-Weymouth is against the MBTA which wants to fix the sidewalks, while decreasing the special education budget in a special fall town meeting! The police department is under fire for setting up machine gun nests, while continually leaving the schools dirty! The town sewer commissioners wants to build a new treatment plant on the Town Commons that will service eight houses near Aaron Reservoir and act as a leaching field for Cohasset Heights Landfill!"

Rejoice, my wisdom hadn't been lost!

The drive up Route 3A was wonderful, especially as I thought about the upcoming Route 3A widening project.

"Ah Turkey Hill, where every Halloween the town's children egg coyotes," I excitedly remembered driving past the park.

My wisdom hadn't been ripped out in placed in a hermetically-sealed plastic bag. I could continue to fill the pages of the Mariner with political insight and wisdom and stuff. And write about the other stuff that, ya know, happens sometimes.. Use a combination of my reporting skills, and a really, really, really, big vocabulary to continue to make the Mariner generally excellent.

If only I could find my office...

Rick Collins is the staff reporter for the Cohasset Mariner.

N.H. repels Red attack

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

You'll be comforted to know that anti-Communism is still alive and well in New Hampshire, where the state legislature stands at the alert to defend us.

This time, it comes in the insidious form of a plaque honoring the 2,800 American volunteers who fought as the Abraham Lincoln Brigade on the side of those who were called "the Loyalists" in the Spanish Civil War.

That war ended 62 years ago, but it's still being fought by New Hampshire legislators, who will vote this week on whether the plaque will be placed in the State House Hall of Flags or on the scrap heap for the BFI truck.

The plaque was authorized by the Legislature's Joint Historical Committee last year to recognize those 12 New Hampshiremen who took up arms against Generalissimo Francisco Franco and his fascist backers, Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini.

But the Loyalists were supported by the Communist Soviet Union, and a lot of the American volunteers joined the Communist Party simply to get to Spain, where the U. S. government had banned travel during the civil war.

For most of those who fought with the Abraham Lincoln Brigade, the enemy was Hitler and fascism, and it didn't matter who was in the foxhole beside them.

To Hitler, the Spanish Civil War was an opportunity to try out the new German military tactics that would be used in World War II, which began only a couple of months after the fighting ended in Spain.

It was in Spain that the Nazis conducted field tests of their new concept of "blitzkrieg," or lightning war, which as to prove so successful in Belgium, France, and Poland and, for a time, in Russia, in the years to come.

It was there that shrieking sirens were built into the Ju 87 Stuka dive bombers so that their screams would scare the bejesus out of those troops or civilians (it didn't matter which) who were unlucky enough to be the targets of their bombs.

It was there that the warplanes of Germany's crack Condor Legion obliterated the town of Guernica and most of its civilian population in preparation for similar attacks on Warsaw, Rotterdam, and Coventry during the Big One.

In New Hampshire, at least, all that pales before the fact that there were Communists fighting alongside those 12 New Hampshiremen and the 2,800 other Americans for the Abraham Lincoln Brigade, 750 of whom died in the war.

Feelings got so intense in the New Hampshire Legislative Office Building the other day that a representative referred to a senator as "Comrade Cohen," and those leaving the building were treated to a chorus of "Good-bye, Communist!"

Theresa Dizillo of Bedford showed up with an American flag and a swab, ready to "mop out any Communist infiltration in the State House."

I, for one, dread the day when the New Hampshire legislature finds out that I, along with several million others, were on the same side as the Red Russians during World War II

Now that you know, let's keep quiet about it, shall we?

CANDIDATES CORNER

Peter Pratt seeks Planning Board seat

Peter J. Pratt this week announced his candidacy for the open five-year seat on the Cohasset Planning Board. A former Selectman and Water Commissioner, Pratt, 45, said, "I would like to help the town move ahead with the complex planning issues before this important board. Cohasset continues to face developmental pressures that challenge us to maintain the character and precious resources of the town."

"Development on Route 3A, Title V septic regulations, our central and North Cohasset sewer projects, efforts aimed at village and harbor revitalization, our diminishing open space and the pending reactivation of the Greenbush rail line, all signal to us that we have to continue to move toward a strategic planning approach to growth and development. Given that we today are facing greater pressures from regional growth and suburban sprawl than at any previous time, our planning efforts have to better meet those pressures in order to protect Cohasset," concluded Pratt.

As a Selectman (1994-1997), Pratt successfully authored, and lobbied the Massachusetts Congressional delegation for passage of the federal Cohasset Harbor Navigation Act that funded the extensive harbor dredging project with some $1.6 million in federal and state funds. Additionally, he was instrumental in securing the state-federal grant funds that resulted in the James Brook flood control project, following the extensive flood of October,

Peter Pratt

1996. He was also one of the primary authors of the Town Manager Act, passed by Town Meeting and the Legislature in 1997 to modernize the structure of town government.

During his tenure on the Water Commission (1984-1987), Pratt was the lead sponsor of Cohasset's Water Resource District zoning bylaw. Designed to protect the surface and underground public drinking water supplies of the town, the bylaw became one of the first such municipal zoning overlay districts in Massachusetts, and exists today as the last major change to the zoning bylaws of Cohasset.

Over a 20-year period, Pratt has served in a variety of other public sector and civic roles. From 1984 to 1989, he was a department head and senior executive aide in the reform administration of former Mayor Eugene C. Brune of the city of Somerville, which oversaw the significant urban revitalization programs in the city's Davis and Union squares. In 1989, he testified to Congress on behalf of the National League of Cities as part of the national effort to regulate consumer cable television rates. In the early 1990s, he helped found the local environmental group SAFE, dedicated to stopping the expansion of the commercial Cohasset Heights Landfill.

Pratt is a 1973 graduate of Cohasset High School, holds a bachelor's degree in government from Bard College in Annandale-on-Hudson, N.Y., and has done course work at Boston University's Graduate School of Management. Professionally, Pratt develops metropolitan area fiber optic networks for telecommunications carriers, most recently as director of market planning for Metromedia Fiber Network based in White Plains, N.Y. Pratt is the son of Mrs. Helen J. Pratt and the late Burtram J. Pratt. He and his wife Donna Pratt, an educational consultant, reside with their two sons at 75 Ripley Road.

Hooked on tulips

"Tulipomania," written by Michael Dash, is a lively account of what must be the strangest and most colorful episode in horticultural history-the tulip craze in 17th century Holland.

The wildly popular new flower and greedy speculators drove prices up to fantastic figures and bankrupted more than a few merchants. One tulip bulb could sell for the price of twelve sheep, two tons of butter, or four barrels of beer. This is the third book in the recent flurry of books set during this fascinating period. Dash's book is nonfiction in contrast to "Tulip Fever" by Deborah Moggach and "Girl with a Pearl Earring" by Susan Vreeland which are both novels.

Hospital awaits word on surgery application

ockton, Cape Cod and South ast, and could approve up to three them by March 1. If South Shore ts approved, the first open heart rgery could take place in the hos- al in January of 2002.

South Shore Hospital's state-of - e-art "cath" (catheterization) lab which has been up and running ice 1994 — can diagnose a host heart disease and ailments, but ysicians then must send their tients to oston hospitals have the open art surgery or ective angio- asty procedure ey need done.

And the people nt to Boston ll only crease, particu- rly with the panding South ore population, hich is also owing older, oted Donald ellefeuille, the ospital's vice esident of strategic development.

ne demographics of the area are in rt behind hospital officials push to fer its patients the option of having double by-pass closer to home.

ne 45-and-older population across e region, the age group more like- to suffer heart disease, is boom- g. Bellefeuille said that while tewide the number of heart surg- ies are declining, on the South ore the number of patients going Boston for heart surgery is creasing.

That's evident in the increase in olume seen at South Shore's cath ., said Marks. Marks said every ar more than 600 patients are ated in the lab, where dye is jected into the arteries to show possible blockages to the heart.

So often, said Marks, his patients at South Shore want to know why he can't do the heart procedure they need right there. Their families wonder too. Because a trip into Boston through Big Dig construction can be as stressful a journey for a patient's family members as it is for the patient. In his letter of support of South Shore Hospital's application to the state commissioner of public health, Rev. James F. Rafferty of St. Paul Church in Hingham writes of this very problem.

> "It's a public health problem to require a patient to go all the way to Boston for this. It's a quality of care issue."
> — Anthony Marks, Chief of Cardiology at South Shore Hospital

"Travel time from distant parts of the region can take more than one hour. This travel via the Southeast Expressway adds to the stress family members experience when visiting a loved one who has undergone this procedure," Rafferty said.

While some patients may still be willing to travel to Boston hospitals based on their reputation for high quality care, Marks believes South Shore Hospital should be able to offer cardiac patients in its service area a choice.

In anticipation of being able to do just that, construction on a new wing to house the heart surgery unit is well underway. And the hospital is ready to make the $3.6 million investment in medical equipment for the facility, said Richard Pozniak, director of public affairs for the hospital. Pozniak is quick to point out that the decision to apply to the DPH is not based on any financial gain — it is a patient care issue.

But there are some critics, including local doctors, who question whether the hospital is prepared to take on this overhead and increasing demand. Some people have expressed concern about whether the hospital's commitment to providing cardiac surgery will cause a drain on already taxed services.

Another issue being raised is the impact cardiac surgeries at community hospitals will have on the big, Boston teaching hospitals. Some have privately questioned how this change will impact the teaching hospitals, who are sure to lose patients and therefore money when they already have high overhead costs.

South Shore officials say they have heard the arguments and don't buy it.

"This is not about money or the status of doing the procedures," said Pozniak. "This is not about winning a medical arms race. It's about serving a public health need."

And Pozniak said it is a need the hospital can afford to meet.

"We are financially stable, he said. "For the past 13 years. South Shore Hospital has had a positive operating margin. We can invest in programs like this." The recognized need for it in the hospital's service area and its unique ability to offer what he called "gold star service" through its partnership with Brigham and Women's Hospital makes it more than viable, Pozniak said.

Marks is also confident that South Shore Hospital's application meets and even goes beyond the DPH criteria. "We've been working on this for more than 10 years," he said.

Under the three-year DPH pilot program, approved hospitals will be allowed to perform 100 surgeries or elective angioplasties the first year, up to 200 the second year and 300 the third year. After which the DPH will review the hospital's record and determine whether heart surgery service can continue. More serious surgery cases including heart transplants will still be sent to Boston hospitals, Marks noted.

Marks said based on the number of catheterizations the hospital does now, he has no doubt the demand for surgery and or elective angioplasty will be there.

Offering heart surgery at community hospitals is something that Marks said is long overdue in the Commonwealth.

Over the last three decades, this kind of surgery has made its way into community hospitals all over the country and the world, Marks said. And a few years ago, the Massachusetts DPH began to explore allowing this state's community hospitals do the work.

"There has been a gradual evolution in thinking about this," he said.

"It's not the high tech procedure it was 30 years ago, he said. "You don't have to be an academic hospital to do this well. Some of the best procedures are done at community hospitals," Marks said. "It's a public health problem to require a patient to go all the way to Boston for this. It's a quality of care issue."

Marks, who also does surgical rotations at Brigham and Women's Hospital, said the goal is to put together a South Shore Hospital program equal in quality the one at Brigham and Women's. They'll do that, he said, by staffing it with Brigham and Women's surgeons. This will mean that patients on the South Shore will get the best doctors Boston has to offer in a hospital much closer to home.

In the meantime, the hospital is also awaiting word from the DPH on when it will be able to begin offering emergency angioplasty to its patients. Marks said the hospital is likely to know soon and could begin performing the emergency procedure in about eight weeks.

Criteria for open heart surgery license

According to Massachusetts Department of Public Health spokesman Roseanne Pawelec a community hospital's ability to partner with a larger teaching hospital is one of the main criteria the DPH is looking for in its open heart surgery applicants. Being able to prove there is a demand for the service within the community hospital's service area and estimate the number of procedures to be done based on case load and diagnostic services now is another key element to the application, she said.

While DPH has a legislative deadline of July 1, Pawelec said the agency has a self-imposed deadline of early March. Whether that will be March 1 or March 3, or March 10, she couldn't say.

For those hospitals not chosen in the first round, Pawelec said the legislation does allow for additional selections over a period of time.

Mt. Auburn, a teaching hospital, and St. Vincent's in Worcester are the only two community hospitals in the state that can perform these cardiac procedures.

The DPH restriction dates back to the 1970s when Malden hospital's program lead to several complications and deaths. At that point, DPH determined that heart surgery was better left to teaching hospitals.

The criteria for the license includes:

Applicants must demonstrate, to the Department of Public Health's satisfaction, the following seven criteria set out in the legislation:

1. Each applicant must have executed a written affiliation agreement with an academic medical center;
2. Each applicant must be operating a fixed cardiac catheterizatian laboratory;
3. Each applicant must be performing at least 1,000 cardiac catheterization procedures per year or have a projected annual cardiac catheterization volume of 1,000 procedures per year by the end of the third year;
4. Each applicant must have a projected open heart surgery volume of at least 300; procedures per year and a projected open heart surgery volume per surgeon of 100 procedures per year, by the end of the third year.
5. Each applicant must demonstrate an ability to finance any capital improvements and operating expenses for said program;
6. Each applicant must develop programs for cardiovascular disease prevention and health promotion aimed at reducing the incidence of cardiovascular disease;
7. Each applicant must comply with clinical standards for program quality developed by the department.

without paying fair-market value would fly in the face of that."

Only Cohasset and Scituate own the right-of-ways in their town. Cohasset bought its section in 1982 for $132,000

Many Cohasset residents had complained at recent public meetings that the town hadn't received enough for the land, which has become an unofficial park for walkers and cross-country skiers. The town estimated the land to be worth upwards of $2 million, if it was broken up and sold to the abutting properties.

But at a public hearing in January, Dasey hinted that Cohassset would be lucky to get anything for the right-of-way and essentially shot down any suggestion that the town could get more for it. At the meeting, Dasey cited the 1991 act as reason the MBTA didn't have to pay anything and could take the land by eminent domain.

The day after the meeting, Hedlund questioned the bill's language which reads, "[the MBTA] is hereby authorized to use or take land of the commonwealth's without compensation" any land it needs for the Greenbush commuter rail line. But senate counsel told Hedlund that the bill said it only applied to land owned by other state agencies, not towns.

Hynes, who was on the transportation committee when the bill passed, recently wrote a letter to Sec. Sullivan that said, "House [Transportation Committee] Chairman Steve Karol assured me [in 1991] that this section did not abrogate any right the town of Scituate has to just compensation for the MBTA acquiring the former rail bed to restore the Greenbush rail."

Bradley said he also put in a phone call to Sec. Sullivan to protest the MBTA's stance.

The question before selectmen now is, with the state's assertion that Cohasset will receive fair-market value for the right-of-way, how will this impact current negotiations? The current proposed deal that has been circulated in public since January was negotiated with the understanding that the MBTA could take the right-of-way without compensation.

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said negotiations now could rest on the query, "How much is the right-of-way worth to the MBTA?" Selectman Merle Brown wondered if the MBTA would contend the right-of-way should be appraised as parkland, not as if it was sold to abutters, or if it was appraised as a railroad bed – both of which could possibly drive the price down.

But if the MBTA doesn't seek an independent appraisal of the land, the Cohasset mitigation deal could be sweetened. Selectmen have been kicking around a number of new concerns to be discussed at their next meeting with the MBTA [see related article], and as Callahan pointed out, that could mean either a new payment price for the land taking, or some extras in the deal.

Selectmen have tentatively scheduled another informal meeting to discuss the Greenbush talks for next Wednesday, Feb. 28.

Greenbush is the proposed third leg of the Old Colony commuter rail line, that would end in Scituate and travel through Cohasset, Hingham and Weymouth. The Plymouth and Middleboro branches have already been restored. Cohasset has not had active passenger rail service since the 1950s.

Dasey departure worries town

issues, the board decided there was a need to get a guarantee from state Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan that negotiations would continue on the same track.

"With Kevin [Dasey] no longer an employee of the MBTA, the town is concerned that the momentum gained will be lost," the town said in a letter sent to Secretary Sullivan and Cohasset's elected officials at the State House. "The [board] is prepared to complete these negotiations in an expeditious fashion, but would like assurances from you as to who will be representing the MBTA from this point on. It is important that this individual have the same dedication and access that Mr. Dasey possessed."

Gruber and other town officials credited Dasey with being the reason mitigation talks had progressed so much after a number of unproductive years.

What's left on the table is more than the dotting of an "I" and the crossing of a "T." The town is unhappy with enforcement language contained within the agreement's cover letter. Cohasset wants to make sure the MBTA is held to the content of the agreement, but Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said until recently, the MBTA was reluctant to include specific language that would do just that.

Perhaps one of the biggest sticking points involves how abutters along the right-of-way can resolve disputes with the MBTA. The MBTA has offered an informal dispute resolution procedure the town can enter into on behalf of residents unhappy with the amount of noise and vibration mitigation they receive.

Both Callahan and Selectman Ronnie McMorris argued that the a separate dispute resolution procedure needs to be set up for private property owners. Callahan said the town can't "bind" property owners to go to the town for help and that abutters should be able to hire their own lawyers to fight the MBTA, if they so choose. But the town would also reserve the right to "step in and enforce the contract on behalf of the abutters," he said.

McMorris pushed for separate informal dispute resolution procedures for the town and private property owners.

The Forest Avenue/ North Main Street/King Street intersection was also discussed. The MBTA wants to install a traffic light that will be coordinated with an oncoming train, so cars don't get backed up on King Street. This could either be a regular traffic light, like the one at the Sohier Street/Ripley Road intersection, or a flashing light that turns solid green when a train is coming to allow cars exiting King Street onto North Main or Forest Avenue to continue through the intersection. However many area residents don't want the light, saying it will result in dozens of cars idling outside of their houses all day. Selectman Merle Brown recommended the MBTA pay for a traffic study of the intersection to come up with the best plan.

Also, in order to meet safety regulations, the MBTA will have to construct a 60-foot berm from the top of the intersection to the right-of-way grade crossing. However, as Brown pointed out, the berm would prevent trucks leaving the town recycling transfer facility coming down North Main Street from making the turn onto King Street.

What's left on the table is more than the dotting of an "I" and the crossing of a "T." The town is unhappy with enforcement language contained within the agreement's cover letter.

"The trailers couldn't make the turn with the berm," he said.. Right now, the trucks have to cross over the opposite side of the road to complete the turn. If they aren't able to make the turn, the trucks would have to travel through town in order to get out to Route 3A.

Other items the town hopes to discuss with the MBTA include:

- the North Main Street entrance into the station —the MBTA has proposed an entrance into the Cohasset station via North Main Street, that would prohibit right hand turns when leaving the station. However Brown suggested the MBTA make it an entrance only, and force all cars to exit onto Route 3A, in order to prevent southbound commuters from cutting through the town. The suggestion was well received by the board, and those in attendance. "I think Merle's right on," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. Also, the town decided it will ask the MBTA to create a pedestrian and bike path alongside the vehicle entrance. Gruber said the train platform will be less than 100 feet away from North Main Street and even if there wasn't an entrance, commuters would still cut through the woods to access the station.
- a crossing guard at the Ripley Road/Sohier Street intersection. Callahan said with the Deer Hill and Osgood Schools just up the road from the Sohier Street crossing, the MBTA should pay for a crossing guard to ensure kids get across the tracks safely.
- the Pond Street grade crossing — Brown said the state shouldn't redesign the sloped intersection or get rid of the massive granite boulder at the base of the hill. "I don't ever remember having an accident there," he said. "[Because of the boulder and curve in the road,] people have to slow down." He said the money the MBTA had planned on spending for the redesign could be allocated elsewhere.
- limiting the time a train can idle on the double section of the Cohasset tracks, while waiting for an oncoming train to pass by.
- making the MBTA hold a public hearing regarding how and when abutters will receive their mitigation, provide detailed sketches of the Rocky Lane bridge by the 60 percent design completion phase, and holding the MBTA to the town's work-hour restrictions.

Selectmen have tentatively scheduled the meeting for 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at Town Hall.

The fine art of festival planning

graduate received a 10-week fellowship at the National Endowment for the Arts where she reviewed grants and learned how the agency works. She also worked part-time at an arts consulting firm. Right out of college, the music and history major landed a job at Great Woods in marketing and public relations. And while her husband was attending law school in Vermont, Kennedy worked at the Hopkins Center at nearby Dartmouth that includes an arts complex and theater.

This time of year, Kennedy is focused on recruiting the dozens of artisans to be featured in about 90 booths on the common during the festival. Unlike many town fairs that may not screen their vendors for quality, the festival tries to be unique. Kennedy takes virtual trips on the Internet and real trips to craft shows to preview the art crafts that will be "juried" or judged for creativity and "sale-ability" of the product by a committee of curators from the art center next month. All work must be handmade using original designs; kits are not accepted.

Kennedy can often be seen clutching her large, white three-ring notebook full of clear, plastic sleeves containing slides featuring examples of jewelry, wood, fine art, glass, sculpture, metal, ceramics and more.

"It's easy to sell most artisans once they know what it's all about," she says. The festival also includes up to 10 food vendors and the popular Strawberry Festival, a separate fund-raiser sponsored by the Second Congregational Church.

Vendors pay a booth fee to participate in the Festival, which is the main money maker for the non-profit art center. The Festival does not charge admission but asks for donations from the thousands of visitors to the main tent that shelters the juried art exhibition. Volunteers also ask for donations at the "arborways" located at various locations along the perimeter of the common that provide the gateways into the event..

"It's expensive," says Kennedy about orchestrating the Festival that also includes continuous stage entertainment including the popular "Fiddlers' Gathering," an afternoon highlighting New England fiddlers. Art center staff work hard behind the scenes to obtain sponsorships that help underwrite large chunks of the Festival, she explains. And help over Festival weekend is provided by an army of 100 volunteers.

But Kennedy takes it all in stride. "It's like planning a wedding," she says. "You get so wrapped up in the details and making sure that everything is filed in the right place that you ride on adrenaline."

Kennedy says when Festival weekend comes, if she's done her homework, there won't be much left to do.

"It's almost like having an out-of-body experience," she says. "You say, 'why don't I have anything to do right now?' It's amazing the way the hundreds of details come together."

Cohasset's Dan Littauer (top) gets the upper hand on Wayland's Ari Joniec in a consolation match won by the Cohasset wrestler, 14-3, at Saturday's Div. 3 state finals.

Littauer comes up just short in bid for All-States

By Micheal Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Close only counts in horse shoes and hand grenades. It most certainly doesn't count in wrestling.

In fact, in wrestling, it is possible to dominate an opponent in just about every conceivable way and still wind up with the loss. This is precisely what happened to Cohasset wrestler Dan Littauer in Saturday's Div. 3 state championships.

As a result, the CHS junior won't be going to the All-State championships this weekend at Franklin High School. Only the top four finishers from each of the three divisional meets qualify, and Littauer finished fifth in the 145-pound division.

"I'm really disappointed in myself because I let the first loss get me down and then I wasn't really prepared to wrestle in the consolation match," said Littauer.

After winning both of his matches in relatively easy fashion on Friday, Littauer advanced to the semi-finals on Saturday against number one seeded Mike Sullivan of Tyngsboro.

Dan gave Sullivan, a senior, all he could handle, but wound up falling on points, 6-3.

"Danny really made a statement there that he's going top be the top guy to deal with in this weight class next year," asserted Cohasset wrestling coach Torin Sweeney.

With Sullivan then moving on to take the Div. 3 crown on a 1-0 decision over Foxboro's Mike Ragusa, Littauer matched up with Wayland's Ari Joniec in the consolation round.

According to Sweeney, Littauer was clearly the better wrestler, but he simply could not get the points necessary against the defensive-

Seniors Shea, Bilodeau and O'Brien asked to shoulder even bigger load in post-season

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After a four year absence from "The Big Dance," the Cohasset boys basketball team is back.

However, with 21 teams in the Div. 3 South Sectionals, many of which seemingly possess the ability to go all the way, the Skippers have certainly got their work cut out for them.

"This was a very satisfying season," reported tenth year coach Ron Ford. "We have some quality wins. I think we can make some noise in this tournament."

"We go how they go. The three of them will carry us. We are a senior driven team, especially come tournament time."

Cohasset boys basketball coach Ron Ford, referring to his tri-captains

With teams coming from the South Shore League, the Patriot League (including the expected first seed Rockland Bulldogs), the Tri-Valley League, the South Coast League and the Mayflower league, the Skippers know they have a large task at hand.

Still, the field seems to be wide open, just waiting for a Cinderella story to pop up and surprise everyone.

"We have got as good a shot as anyone," asserted Ford. "No one team stands above everybody else."

After ending the season on a subpar note— losing three straight games before winning a close one in the finale— Ford does admit some concern as he prepares his team to face the iron of Div. 3 iron.

"It is a concern," conceded Ford. "You never want to go into tournament the way we did."

Though the official pairings will not come out until the 25th, it appears Rockland, Cardinal Spellman, Ashland, Carver and possibly Abington will make the top five. Though the Abington squad started out the year 2-4, they have won 13 of their last 14 games, and still have two home games left.

"You don't want to draw them; they are hot," noted Ford, whose Skippers fell victim to the Green Wave last week.

The next few teams in the rankings would be (in no particular order) Bourne, Norton, Norwell, Fairhaven, East Bridgewater, Scituate, and Cohasset.

The top 11 teams should receive a preliminary round bye, meeting some of the lower seeded teams in the first round.

But regardless of what the Skippers draw, the three Cohasset senior captains, Erik Shea, TJ Bilodeau, and Doug O'Brien should be especially ready to take on this tournament, with five of the six Div. 3 teams in the South Shore League being represented.

"We go how they go," admitted Ford. "The three of them will carry us. We are a senior driven team, especially come tournament time."

The three veterans showed their playoff form last Thursday night in

Jacobucci takes sectional crown

Now it's on to state championships for Scituate swimmer

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Scituate's Garet Jacobucci won the combined South/West Sectional State Swimming Championships last Thursday in both the 50- and 100-yard freestyle. Ho hum...

Scituate/Cohasset swimming coach Jamie Kearney practically guaranteed these wins for last week's Mariner and Jacobucci, a Scituate High senior, delivered.

Garet won the 50 with a time of 25.64, more than a second ahead of nearest finisher Vanessa Morton of Nauset (26.67), and more than doubled up on that margin of victory in the 100 with her time of 55.26, 2.65 seconds ahead of Algonquin's Jenni Baker.

Now it's on to the state championships (Sunday at Northeastern University), and apparently stiffer competition. Jenna Shoemaker, of Lincoln-Sudbury, captured the North championship in the 50 with a time of 25.45, nearly two-tenths of a second better than Garet's winning time.

Weston's Caroline Curtis also finished with a better time than Garet's in the 100, 54.97, while Shoemaker finished second in that meet just .08 seconds behind Garet's time of 55.26.

Surprisingly, Coach Kearney seemed almost nonplussed by this information, as she again projected victory for her star swimmer.

Girls team eyes future

Positive signs abound as Lady Skippers wrap up rebuilding season

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

It wasn't fun at many points this year, but the girl's basketball program at Cohasset High School is looking to improve over the next few years, and get back up to tournament status.

"We are going to have to hang tough, and keep moving forward," said second year coach Ellen Carr earlier in the year.

With a record of 1-19, it may seem hard to pick out a few highlights from the season, but since it has been considered a rebuilding year, Carr seems to think her team has learned a great deal, and perhaps they can surprise some people

Top scorer Lindsay Grossman (#44), a sophomore, is just one in a group of talented underclassmen who should help lead the Lady Skippers to bigger and better things next season.

Mini-March Madness...catch it

EXTRA POINTS WITH MIKE SPELLMAN

Does the resurgent play and renewed likeability of our Boston Celtics (now that the Armani-clad snake oil sales man is no longer front and center) have any of you feeling hoops happy again? Are you, like me, back to appreciating just how beautiful a game this can be when it's played well, with hard work and an unshakable team concept as the cornerstone?

Well, if you answered "yes" to either of these queries, I've got some good news for you: the state basketball tourney is about to get underway and there are several quality entrants from Marinerland in serious running for post-season glory.

Honestly folks, it doesn't get much better than this. This single-elimination format for all of the state's teams finishing with a .500 or better record has all the elements that has made March Madness this country's number one sports spectacle. Puh-leaze get out of here with that nonsense about the Super Bowl. If it wasn't for the gamblers, that NFL capper would probably run neck-and-neck with the NHL All-Star game in the winter sports ratings war.

What high school state tourney play might give up to the NCAA's annual 64-team tourney in terms of next year.

One highlight, of course, would be the "1" on the left side of the record column, a come-from-behind 49-45 win over Mashpee.

Cohasset was down 29-14 at halftime, in danger of losing their tenth straight to start the season. But the Lady Skippers clawed their way back with aggressive traps that flustered Mashpee's ballhandlers.

"The guards did a wonderful job of putting pressure on the ball," praised Carr.

Though their record was not close to sea level, that victory did mean a lot to the struggling squad.

"I think it takes the pressure off," said Carr about getting the first win after a string of losses.

The team was remarkably young, the youngest in the league with four sophomores and a freshman in the starting line-up.

LaRaine Langford ran the point, using great ballhandling skills to break traps and run the halfcourt set offenses.

"She is the one who runs the plays and sets up other people to score," said sophomore shooting guard Heather Peraino of her selfless point guard.

Peraino and shooting guard Lindsay Grossman spent the entire season leading the team in scoring. Not to put a jinx on either of them, but they both have a distinct chance of becoming the first girls in the history of Cohasset High School to reach the 1,000 career points plateau.

Sophomore power forward and captain Maura O'Brien led the team in rebounding for the second consecutive year, and looks to be an inside threat down the line.

The only freshman on the team, center Danielle Pinkus, really helped the Lady Skippers establish a post threat, and establish a presence on the offensive glass.

The Sixth WoMan was senior captain and team emotional leader Katie Wenmark, a player who was able to play any position on the court. Apart from her talents on the court, though, Wenmark is known for dedicating herself to helping out younger players, and making them gain acceptance.

"She is going to be missed so much," said Peraino of Wenmark, the only graduating senior on the team, "not only on the court, but as a friend."

Thanks in large part to Wenmark's efforts, most everyone on the team would agree that they were pleased with how close knit they were.

"We bond so much," reported Peraino. "That is what kept us going: our friendship."

Indeed, after a year like the one this team just had, the future is the only sensible direction in which to look. And with many talented first year players on the freshman team, improvement could be just around the corner.

With the varsity squad lacking size, frosh team members Libby Meikelham and Ashley Faber should help tremendously in that department next season. The freshman squad also featured an abundance of speed this season, something you can never have enough of, with guards like Gillian Weber and Courtney Caron.

Tony Rolfe also has been grooming an excellent girls Middle School team this year, with young talent that should be a great lift down the line.

an 80-72 win over South Shore Voc Tech, with a big crowd on hand for Senior Night.

Bilodeau had one of his best games of the year, nearly recording a triple double with 21 points, nine rebounds, eight assists and three steals.

O'Brien came off missing two weeks due to sickness to record 14 points and seven boards, while Shea had 10 points to go with nine rebounds and four assists.

"We needed that kind of effort from them, and we got it," lauded Ford.

This game ended up being much closer than anyone had originally anticipated, since the Skippers tore down the Vikings 74-48 a month ago.

But the visiting Voc Vikings pulled to within 72-70 with two minutes left, thanks to some timely perimeter shooting, prompting Ford to use a timeout.

Fortunately, Cohasset finished off the game with a 8-2 run, including 6-of-6 from the foul line, to seal the victory, their first since the 66-65 thriller over league champion Carver on Feb. 2.

All-Star Game provides thrills

Taking a break from the intense preparation for the upcoming postseason, Bilodeau and Shea were able to play in the Annual South Shore League versus Patriot League All-Star game.

The top few players from nearly all of the teams in both leagues came together for one entertaining night at Middleboro High School last Friday, where even the losing players (those from the SSL) had smiles on their faces after the game. The bigger Patriot League team came out on top, 100-95. Obviously, as is also the case with the annual NBA star-fest, defense was not the order of the evening.

"It was fun," laughed Ford. "It is a nice show."

Some of the more vertically gifted competitors were able to amuse the crowd with athletic dunks during warm-ups, and a couple of times during the game itself.

"There is a lot of height in the league," observed Ford. "We just weren't blessed with it."

Norwell High sophomore Gerry Corcoran hit two alley-oop lay-ups during the game, en route to a 13 point performance, while teammate Mike Gilraine connected for 14.

The surprisingly powerful Frazier brothers of Carver, Ralph and Nate, lit up the rim with slams down the lane, combining for 25 of the SSL's 95 points.

Jessie McKinnell of Scituate ignited the crowd with a dunk that he threw off the backboard, caught in the air, and tomahawked in.

However, the dunk of the night was awarded to Hull senior center John Lidington, who led the SSL in scoring this year. Lidington impressed everyone in attendance with his agility and athleticism, converting a 360 degree dunk from the block. He finished the All-Star game with 10 points, nine rebounds and four blocks.

Bilodeau recorded six points, including one amazing shot that appeared to be from behind the backboard. Shea drilled a three-pointer early in the game to get the ball rolling for the SSL squad, and also had three steals.

At halftime, junior point guard Kyle Weber represented the Skippers in the three point contest, hitting four treys in forty-five seconds. The winner was Kevin McDermott of East Bridgewater, but the highest forty-five second total of the night was nine, by second place finisher Tim LaConte of Norton.

Game Notes

South Shore Voc Tech

-The first time these two teams met, the Skippers opened the game by scoring 21 of the game's first 23 points. But in this contest, the Vikings held Cohasset to only 12 of the first 23.

-Sophomore power forward Ben Lynner had nine points and one rebound in the first half, while recording two points and six boards in the second half.

-The two teams combined for 23 turnovers in the first half and nine in the second.

Da All-Star Game

-With its four representatives, including backcourt standouts Bobby Murphy and Ken Keefe, Rockland led all teams in scoring with a combined 37 points.

-The only hometown representative of the Middleboro/Sachems, Craig Murphy, made the crowd erupt with a forty foot, step back three-pointer.

-Both teams hit 24 foul shots, including the first seven of the game, and at one point, 12 in a row.

-Matt Woodworth of Hull started off his three-point contest round by hitting six of his first seven shots.

Jacobucci takes sectional crown

to a swimmer, and that's especially true for Garet," appraised Kearney. "She's always at her best when she's pushed. She swam as hard as she had to to win (the sectionals), and now I believe she'll swim well enough to win the states."

To punctuate this assertion, Kearney pointed to Garet's individual times in the 50 versus her times for the same distance swimming the anchor leg for the relay team. Often forced to come from behind in the team event, Jacobucci has consistently posted her best times here. A few weeks back, she notched a 24.09 in her leg, a mere second off of the Olympic qualifying time. She also posted a 24.91 two weeks ago, finishing second to Duxbury's top male swimmer.

Another factor in Garet's less than premium performance at the sectionals is the fact that she had not had time to fully taper off her regular school season training. That won't be an excuse at the states, as Garet has 10 days to focus on short-distance workouts.

Even Jacobucci, who is painfully modest, concedes that she likes her chances of shaving considerable time off of her sectional times.

"Any swimmer will tell you that proper tapering is a big deal," explained Jacobucci, who has been accepted to Emory University in Atlanta, which boasts one of the nation's premiere swimming programs. "And I think that, plus the better competition, will really make a difference for me on Sunday."

Unfortunately, no other member of the first-year team qualified for the states. The girls team did, though, finish a respectable 12th overall in the 18-team field.

The relay team of Delia Regan, Marion Powers, Katherine Noonan and Garet, swimming the anchor, finished 11th in the 200-yard freestyle with a time of 1:58.08 and 16th in the 200-yard medley at 2:16.76.

Fortunately, though, it appears that many members of the Scituate/Cohasset joint squad will take almost as much pride in Garet's accomplishments as they would have their own.

"Garet is a very easy kid to root for," claimed Kearney. "There's no prima donna attitude there at all. No one has been a better teammate than her. She has tried to help a lot of these kids, especially the younger ones. Now she's representing two towns, and I think we should all be proud of her.

Littauer comes up just short in bid for All-States minded Joniec. The Wayland wrestler took a 3-2 lead in the second period and then stalled for much of the final period to take the match by that that margin, thus forcing Littauer out of the All-States.

Angry at himself over the mental letdown, Littauer then went on to destroy Joe Habel of Drury High School, 14-4, for fifth-place honors. This makes him top alternate for the All-States, meaning if one of the top four drop out he'd take his place.

Ironically, Dan's older brother, Ben, also finished fifth in the Div. 3 Championships at 145 in 1998, and got to wrestle when one of the four who finished ahead of him was unable to go.

Sweeney, who has coached wrestling for 18 years, figures something like this happens between 10 and 15 percent of the time.

"It would be something if lightening struck twice for the same family," said Sweeney with a smile. "I certainly believe Dan is one of the top 12 wrestlers at 145 pounds in the state. I think he deserves it, but sometimes life's not as fair as you'd like it to be."

"I don't think it's going to happen, but I can still hope," said Littauer, who has continued to practice daily with just in mind.

Other Cohasset wrestlers

None of the other three Cohasset High wrestlers who qualified for the Div. 3 states came close to making it to the All-States.

Freshman Phil Strazzula, who finished fourth in the sectionals at 112 pounds, won his first match, but lost his next two. The second loss came to the number three seed in the class, and Strazzula actually had him on points (3-2) going into the third period.

"I thought Phil wrestled incredibly well for a freshman," appraised Sweeney. "The way he goes after it, I just know he's going to be a force in this area over the next three years."

Sophomore Terry Baroudi (130 pounds), who finished third at Sectionals, lost his first match in a heartbreaker, 5-4, and then re-aggravated the shoulder injury that kept him off the mat for the last three weeks of the regular season, forcing him to drop out.

Senior captain Dan Duffy, who finished third in the Sectionals at 135 pounds, lost both of his matches by two points to be eliminated.

Although a regular season record of 9-12 was certainly not up to the lofty standards established by Cohasset's rich wrestling history, Sweeney insists that high hopes for this program are warranted.

"We've got a lot of young talent and a lot of enthusiasm," reported the veteran coach. "We'll be back up there soon enough."

The Cohasset team was awarded an honorable mention for sportsmanship by the Massachusetts Officials Association. The annual sportsmanship award went to Wellesley High, with Cohasset and four other schools among the 49 in Div. 3 being named as runners-up.

individual athleticism and skill, it comes pretty close to recouping in the area of provinciality. Think about it: what could be better than rooting for the teenager who pumps your gas, or your old paper boy or your baby sitter or even some kid with whom you have no relationship. If he or she is from your hometown, or even a nearby town, why can't there be some sort of kinship?

On the boys side of the hoops ledger, we have Silver Lake, Abington, Rockland, Scituate, Cohasset and Norwell going to this area's version of 'The Big Dance" and each team has plenty of reasons compelling enough to foster an appreciation, if not a genuine affection.

Silver Lake has lost just one game in Old Colony League play over the past two seasons, making the Lakers two-time league champs. The Lakers are competing in Division 1, however, where it is a relatively small fish in a big and deep pond, so they are something of a long shot to do much in the tourney.

They're far from the biggest or most athletic among the Div. 1 teams in Eastern Mass. What they do have is four seniors in the starting lineup who play very well together and who carry out a beautifully efficient attack, masterminded by veteran head coach Dick Arieta. The Lakers also feature the most complete high school basketball talent these eyes have beheld in several years. His name is Chris Conroy, and what makes his game so glorious to behold is the non-flashy way in which he does everything within the framework of the team philosophy. Indeed, this understated proficiency he embodies seems representative of the whole team.

And if it's watching these kinds of individual talents that gets you going, be advised that we've got a potential Division 1 collegiate recruit at Norwell High, and he's only a sophomore. Fifteen-year-old Gerry Corcoran led the South Shore League in scoring this year, tossing 'em down at a 25 ppg clip. He's 6'foot-5 and can do it all on the court, and he's still got gobs of untapped potential! He's already been contacted by at least one Big East school along with a number of other prominent hoops universities. Once he puts all the elements together, he could become one of the best basketball products this area has seen in a long time. I can think of a lot worse things to do than watch and follow a potentially great "work in progress."

I don't know too many people who don't like to tell "I remember when..." stories. Well, here's your chance at one.

Even without Corcoran, these Clippers would prove an enjoyable take. Senior Mike Gilraine possesses a nice inside-outside game, and sophomore point guard Bobby Savoy is as hard working and scrappy a player as I've personally seen anywhere this season.

Perhaps it's that "40 minutes of hell" look you prefer (of course, in high school basketball, the equivalent would be "32 minutes of hell"). If that's the case, I'd like to heartily recommend that you check out Scituate, Rockland or Cohasset. All three of these teams were designed by their coaches to press and run all night.

Rockland is coached by the venerable Bob Fisher, who earned his 500th career coaching win this season. He's created a factory for in-your-face, up-tempo basketball that has been the model that too many high school coaches to count on the South Shore have attempted to emulate. None has quite got it down yet, though, as attested to by Rockland's continued dominance. The Bulldogs are currently led by lightening quick point guard Bobby Murphy (best known for his exploits on the gridiron, but quite a force on the hard floor as well), long range bomber Ken Keefe, bruiser Matt McDonald and a host of role players who seem to completely understand and embrace their role on this team.

Many of these same things can be said about the Scituate program, as rookie head coach Matt Poirier appears to be one of the few who might actually have a clue about imitating Fisher's system. The Sailors didn't even make the tourney last year, but the job Poirier has done in transforming them is truly one for the annals. With a 10-2 record in Patriot League play (14-5 overall), the Sailors finished the year as co-champs with Rockland, and they did this with their returning center and top scorer (senior Mike Hale) out of action the entire season with a stress fracture.

If you're into good team play or strong individual talent, this team has something for you. Joel Racicot is a sweet shooting two guard whose signature shot is the seldom seen anymore "stop and pop". And Jesse McKinnell, the team's 6-foot-5 junior center, has moves in the post that on occasion bring back visions of Kevin McHale.

As for Cohasset...well, in my opinion any team from that school is worth getting whole hog behind anytime something noteworthy is taking place. With just over 300 students in grades 9-12, CHS is by far the smallest school in the South Shore League. In fact, it is much smaller in terms of student population than many of the state's Div. 4 schools: However, because Cohasset High is aligned with the Pilgrim Conference, and the smallest of its member leagues (the South Shore), it can't go any lower than Div. 3.

What coach Ron Ford does with this team on a consistent basis is nothing short of remarkable. Though the Skippers clearly do not have the size, athleticism or raw talent of most of the schools they're forced nightly to go against, they survive and even occasionally thrive with magnificent total team play. That has been the case this season with a 13-7 record. No team you'll see moves the ball better than this one. The play on the perimeter, with sharp shooters and slashers like Erik Shea and brothers TJ and Matt Bilodeau, is what drives this team, but it's been the emergence of underclassmen Ben Lynner and Sean Connoly on the inside that has forced opposing defenses to stay honest and given these "little" guys the room to operate.

Abington, likewise, features a wonderfully balanced attack, with Nick French, Mark Sulomonte, James Smith and Brian Kallenberg all averaging double figures in scoring.

As for the girls, how can anyone not root for Norwell. Knowing he had a team quite capable of running the table in the South Shore League and achieving an unbeaten season, coach Bill Gerety still agreed at the beginning of this season to take part in the this past weekend's annual Hall of Fame Tournament at Massssoit College in Brockton. The event also had as entrants far larger powerhouse teams from Hingham, Duxbury and Braintree.

Sure enough, the Lady Clippers went into the invitational with a perfect record (19-0) and came out with a blemish, a 50-43 loss to Div. 1 tourney frontrunner Braintree, 50-43. And Gerety will tell you until he's blue in the face that neither he or any player on his team has even an inkling of regret over playing these games.

"There's a reason we wanted to play these games at the end of the season," said Gerety, who is retiring from teaching and coaching at the end of this season after 35 years. "Our goal is to be as ready as we can for the tourney, and these games might have helped us as much as any of our wins."

Police, town settle grievance

Day detective back at post

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The police department has almost returned to status quo now that daytime detective Rick Grassie is back in plain clothes.

Evening detective Greg Lennon can serve in that capacity as long as three uniformed officers are on duty. In other words, Lennon has to be in uniform if there are less than three other officers on duty — the requirement under minimum manning so no overtime is used to fill the shift, Town Manager Mark Haddad said. The town has only two detectives.

The temperature between Town Hall and the police warmed last week following what is described as a productive meeting with Haddad, Police Chief Brian Noonan and police union president William Quigley.

Two weeks' ago, Haddad ordered the detectives back in plain clothes to cover the gap created by three officers in the 17-member department who are currently out on disability. Callbacks to fill shifts have sent the police overtime budget through the roof. Police are not allowed to refuse overtime.

The union planned to file a grievance — now off the table — over the change in working conditions for the detectives.

Haddad said Town Counsel pointed out, based on the collective bargaining agreement, the town would have to talk to the union about the change in duties.

Quigley explained the town could change working conditions for the protection of the town but not to rein in the overtime budget. He said despite reduced personnel, the department has not had a problem filling shifts.

Quigley described the meeting with Haddad as positive.

> "We have mutual respect and share the common goal of having a good, well-equipped, effective police department."
> — Union president William Quigley

"We have mutual respect and share the common goal of having a good, well-equipped, effective police department," Quigley said.

The union decision to settle the grievance follows on the heels of selectmen backing a federal grant that would pay the lion's share of a new police officer's salary for three years. Noonan, the police chief, said he has already asked for a list of candidates from Civil Service, a state agency that compiles lists of candidates for state and municipal public safety positions. But even if hired fairly soon, a prospective, untrained officer would have to go through the 21-week state police academy. He said it would likely be August at the earliest, before a new officer could be on board.

Quigley said when one officer gets back from sick leave and another is hired through the grant, the night detective can be restored in full. He said it was nice to see the selectmen support the grant. In a recent letter to the board, the union was critical of selectmen for what it saw as their lack of support for the police department.

"Hopefully this brought some problems to light," Quigley said about issues aired over the past few weeks.

Analysis of police overtime provided

In an analysis of police overtime, town financial officials say that unexpected line-of-duty and extended sick leaves have resulted in an unacceptable level of overtime for the department.

The report, requested by Selectman Merle Brown, explained that each officer below the 16 (the department has 17 officers not including the chief) incurs about $68,000 in additional overtime a year. Increases in manpower would reduce or eliminate the amount of structural overtime and offset some increases in manpower cost.

In fiscal year 2000 that ended June 30, the police overtime budget was $221,768 including nearly $57,000 in vacation coverage and $40,000 in sick-time coverage.

Adding one officer could equate to $31,000 in annual overtime savings. Hiring two officers could save about $62,000 in overtime, almost enough to offset the average yearly cost of $75,000, the analysis stated.

POLICE BRIEFS

Scituate man faces drug charges

An open can of beer allegedly placed on the ground next to the driver's door while the driver, later identified as Craig M. Sheerin, 18, of 8 Trudy's Lane, Scituate, went into a Cohasset convenience store led to an arrest on drug charges Friday night.

While on routine patrol, Cohasset Officer William Quigley drove through the Mobil Mart parking lot off Route 3A at about 11:10 p.m. where he spotted a black Volkswagen Jetta parked with the engine running. On the ground outside the driver's door was an open can of Budweiser. After the driver came out of the store, he allegedly picked up the beer and got behind the wheel. The officer pulled behind the car in which there was also 15-year-old female juvenile sitting in the back seat. Further investigation revealed three more cans on beer inside the car, four plastic bags containing what police believe to be cocaine, and an open 30-pack of Budweiser in the trunk. At booking, Sheerin was alleged to be in possession of a quantity of pills believed to be the drugs: ecstasy, valium and an anti-depressant. The beer, powdered substances and pills were held for evidence.

Police charged Sheerin with illegal possession of a Class B substance (cocaine) with intent to distribute; and three other drug possession charges; as well as minor transport alcohol and drinking alcohol from an open container. The juvenile was charged with minor in possession of alcohol.

Sheerin was arraigned on the charges Tuesday in Quincy District Court. He was released with the promise to return for a pre-trial hearing March 28. The 15-year-old girl was scheduled to be arraigned in juvenile court yesterday after the Mariner went to press.

Officers praised

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan commended officers Richard Yocum and Christy Tarantino for their "outstanding police work" recently.

Yocum helped rescue a Cohasset man who had fallen through ice while skating on Lily Pond.

As Yocum was on his way to work Jan. 3, he picked up a report of a man through the ice on his car scanner and drove to the pond. He grabbed a canoe from the shore, pushed it over several hundred yards of ice, hopped in and then helped the man hold on to the side until the Cohasset Fire Department rescue team arrived.

"Your quick assessment and decisive action, taken at no small personal risk, prevented a potential tragedy," Noonan wrote. The victim was treated at South Shore Hospital for hypothermia.

Tarantino intercepted a broadcast Feb. 12 from the Hull Police Department regarding a stolen motor vehicle. Within eight minutes Tarantino spotted the car on Hull Street in Cohasset, followed the vehicle and conducted a "felony" stop on Nantasket Avenue. With the help of Hull police, a man was arrested and charged, and the vehicle recovered.

"Your quick assessment of the situation and your decisive action took a criminal off the streets in near record time," Noonan stated.

The chief said the actions and professionalism of Yocum and Tarantino are a credit to themselves, the police force, and to the town.

Spilled coffee linked to collision

A Milton woman driving a Toyota sedan told police she was traveling northbound on Jerusalem Road at about 10 a.m. Monday morning and while going around a corner, she spilled hot coffee on her leg. Police said, the mishap caused her to cross over the solid yellow line and hit the Honda sedan driven by Carol S. Hamilton, 34, of 546 Jerusalem Road.

Police cited Erin E. Mitchell, 29, of 58 Governors Road, Milton, with marked lanes violation and impeded operation of a motor vehicle. The women were both transported by Cohasset ambulance to South Shore Hospital where they were treated and released.

Two chicks, one big show

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Have you seen "two chicks painting" at the James Library? Dynamic and artist duo Corinne Campobasso of Weymouth and Susan Davis of Holliston have put their minds and art work together to come up with a unique show on display through March 1.

The exhibit is first collaboration of Campobasso and Davis and features about 40 of their combined works consisting of oil and watercolor paintings. The works feature various still life pieces, landscapes, floral portraits, and others. All of the works on display at the show are for sale.

Corinne Campobasso
Susan Davis

"It's a show about a friendship that started in Braintree back in 1996," Campobasso said. "We met in an art class there and instantly became friends."

That friendship is represented in the combined works exhibit. The two artists have found they have many things in common, first and foremost they are relatively new to painting.

Davis has been painting since 1996, and Campobasso has been painting since 1991.

"We've each had a few sales," Davis said regarding some of the paintings within the exhibit. "People do seem to really like the show."

"My husband actually introduces himself as 'Mr. Chick' now," Campobasso said.

Both women have done their own shows in the past. Both are also members of various area art organizations like the Braintree art Association and the North River Art Society in Marshfield. In fact, after they initially met in 1996, Campobasso and Davis started venturing out to the North River Art Society together. Davis would drive all the way from Holliston to do so.

Campobasso and Davis started taking a workshop with the North River Art Society member John Kilroy, an individual they both listed as an artistic influence.

"After awhile, we decided to start painting outside," Davis said.. "We wanted to start painting on-location."

Corinne Campobasso of Weymouth and Susan Davis of Holliston have joined forces for an exhibit at Norwell's James Library called "Two Chicks Painting." The show will run through March 1.

The exhibit is first collaboration of Campobasso and Davis and features about 40 of their combined works consisting of oil and watercolor paintings. The works feature various still life pieces, landscapes, floral portraits, and others.

And for the next couple of years, Campobasso and Davis kept painting in each other's company, practicing their techniques and improving them.

In late 1999, a member of The James Library contacted both women, asking them if they would like to do a show together. Campobasso and Davis said yes, and immediately got to work on the show.

"When we found out we were going to do the show, I started working on frames," Davis said. "It's like having the right shoes to go with a given dress—you need the right frame for a painting."

"We really put a lot of effort and concentration into choosing good paintings. It was a lot of work," Campobasso noted.

The name — "Two Chicks Painting" given to the exhibit fit the "fun" way the two artist friends go about painting together.

For the show, both women selected some of their favorite paintings each of them had done in the past, and both painted a couple of pieces specifically for the exhibit. All in all, they came up with what they thought would be a good mix for the exhibit. The end result is paintings that compliment each other and earn compliments from many who have viewed the show.

"They fit great," Davis said of the various paintings in the show. "They are complimentary to each other."

"My husband actually introduces himself as 'Mr. Chick' now."
Weymouth artist Corinne Campobasso

"A lot of people have told us they think our styles are a lot different," Campobasso said. "But they still manage to work together."

"For me, painting is about seeing a lot of things and having to whittle them all down into one painting," Davis said. "It's about keeping it simple. A good painting is about composition, design, value, and color, but it's also about having the ability to convey an idea."

"A good painting evokes an emotional response in a viewer," Campobasso said, "whether it be nostalgia, beauty, awe, or shock. Whatever it is, it gets a viewer's attention."

Both say when the show at the James Library is over, it will probably not be the last time the area hears from the "Two Chicks Painting."

"This started as a hobby, and now it's an obsession," Campobasso said. "But most of all, it's just a lot of fun."

For more information on the "Two Chicks Painting" show, call the James Library at (781) 659-7100. Campobasso can be reached at (781) 331-0882 or through e-mail at art-corinne@yahoo.com. Davis can be reached through e-mail at shp-davis@aol.com.

The musical dance revue SwingDance America comes to Massasoit Community College Friday, Feb. 23.

Musical dance review steps over to Massasoit College

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

By now, the late 90s trend of swing dance bands such as the Brian Setzer Orchestra and Big Bad Voodoo Daddy has ebbed, but apparently the dancing itself has not.

At least not if you ask Whitney Trilling, a New York dancer, choreographer and dance theatre director who since last summer, has also been the producer of SwingDance America. During the last eight months, Trilling has taken the self-billed "original swing dance show" on the road from New York, Florida and Los Angeles to British Columbia and even as far as Tokyo to thrilled audiences and rave reviews.

SwingDance America is described as a personable, exuberant celebration of swing dance, covering the range of the music and its social context and its history from its roots in the 1920s through today. The high-

ON HER OWN

Singer/songwriter Sally Taylor brings her unique style to the South Shore

CORRESPONDENT

Sally Taylor is one of the legions of independent-minded modern singer/songwriters working the current scene. Performers of this stripe tend to shun the strict, bottom line-oriented rigors of major-label, music-biz promotion — which are all too often at odds with artists' own desires and ambitions — and find outlets to make music on their own terms.

For Taylor, the outlets of choice are on-site, live-gig vending and the Internet, where the cherub-voiced, folk-rock singer/songwriter has personally overseen sales, promotion and distribution of two independent CDs released since late 1998. Local listeners can expect to find Taylor out in the lobby, right behind the vending table well stocked with copies of both discs, that is, when she's not onstage.

"I would describe my sound as mostly folk-rock, with jazz influences from different sources."
Singer/songwriter Sally Taylor

Music has been a big part of Taylor's life. You could say it runs in the family. The daughter of James Taylor and Carly Simon, the royal couple of 1970s singer/songwriter rock, Taylor will make a rare Boston-area appearance performing at Norwell's Company Theatre Saturday at 8 p.m.

Although there are some definite similarities to the lyrical, folk/soft-rock musical styles of her famous mom and dad to be spotted on her own two CDs, there are also just as many of Taylor's own creative ideas and approaches to be heard as well, making listening a distinct, intimate experience overall.

"I would describe my sound as mostly folk-rock, with jazz influences from different sources," said Taylor. "I decided right from when I began playing with my own band that, rather than try to look for that major-label record deal, to go with the grassroots, 'minimalistic' approach."

"Musically, I have a very eclectic background, between what I've grown up listening to and what I've performed myself. From the start, I've wanted to see how that evolves in my own music. I like the whole process of writing and creating music and seeing what it takes to get it across to listeners. And I prefer to take that approach before signing a deal with a large record label and giving other business people the authority over my music, although I've been made offers. I've generally wanted to keep my eyes open, and my ears open, and my integrity intact," Taylor said.

So far, Taylor's collective musical career and strategy has netted some interesting results. The singer's first disc, 1998's Tomboy Bride, showcases musical settings from mellow singer/songwriter rock to "torchy" nightclub/cabaret jazz, much of which would feel right at home on any album by James or Carly or by their contemporaries such as uncle Livingston or Carole King, for that matter. Through live-show sales, Taylor's own web site (www.sallytaylor.com) and general word-of-mouth, it has also sold an impressive 7,000-plus copies.

On her second disc, the newly released Apt. #6S, Taylor turns up the volume just a bit, with a more pronounced electric guitar and band feel, and branches out stylistically. The singer's voice takes on the arch, cunning tone ex-10,000 Maniacs will recall from that band's lead singer — Natalie Merchant. Although interestingly enough, Taylor does not cite a great deal of familiarity or influence from that singer or her former band, and the music edges toward more sprightly pop, shuffling blues, island calypso and even an eccentric "artsy" tone.

Sally Taylor, daughter of famous folk singers/songwriters Carly Simon and James Taylor will bring her own band and sound to the South Shore in a Company Theatre performance Saturday night.

Said Taylor, "Generally, my songwriting process starts with a melody in mind. Then the chord progressions take me into the lyrical part of the song, and finally I just let whatever is there musically and lyrically come through me. It's more of an emotional process than anything else. I've been very influenced by the music of both my parents, but I also draw ideas from a lot of other sources, such as Portuguese jazz, jazz players like Stan Getz and Astrud Gilberto and singers like Sheryl Crow and Shawn Colvin."

Although Taylor tours mainly with a full band, playing some 150-170 shows a year at venues from nightclubs to casinos to coffeehouses, the singer's Norwell date is planned as a stripped-down acoustic-duo set with her band's guitarist, Chris Soucy. Like her typical band gigs, Taylor promises the usual mixed bag of original songs from both her CDs, plus a well-blended selection of cover songs, such as, for example, Traffic's "Pearly Queen," Steeler's Wheel's 70s chestnut "Stuck In the Middle With You" and songs by alternative rave Ben Harper, among others.

"Our live shows are always unpredictable, and we always like audience participation," Taylor said.

Sally Taylor will perform Saturday, Feb. 24 at Norwell's Company Theatre. Tickets are priced at $22 in advance and $25 the day of the performance and are available by calling (781)871-2787.

Potato soup

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Everyone knows that soups make quick and easy dinners yet most of us stick to the run-of-the-mill variations such as vegetable, chicken noodle, or tomato. Few of us have made potato soup, a staple of many cuisines, which is hearty and, if well made, also complex. The problem is achieving just the right texture - creamy rather than slippery - as well as enhancing flavors so that the soup does not turn out bland.

The first issue was the selection of the potatoes. I tried low starch (red), medium starch (all-purpose and Yukon gold), as well as high starch (russet) potatoes. The red potatoes were the worst of the lot - they didn't offer enough body to the soup and their texture was 'slippery.' In addition, their sweet flavor was not enough of a balance to the heavy cream. Next, I tried all-purpose and they were too bland. The texture was decent but the flavor was unremarkable. Yukon golds, if you enjoy their distinctive flavor and yellow color, were good (I find their strong and slightly unusual flavor to be a bit overpowering for this recipe) but the russets offered the most body and their earthiness was a welcome addition to what could be a very dull main course recipe. This recipe needs big potato flavor and the russets deliver.

The onion is no surprise nor is the addition of leek as the pairing of potato and leek is a French classic. I had decided early on to use a balance of chicken stock and heavy cream and finally settled on 3 1/2 cups of stock to 1/2 cup heavy cream. I did not want to overpower the potatoes with too much dairy. I also tested half-and-half and light cream but the soup was too milky. The addition of one tablespoon of herbs to the soup while it simmers and then a healthy dose of raw herbs to garnish just before serving brightened the flavor considerably. I also tried adding a couple of tablespoons lemon juice but it tasted like anchovies in a slice of apple pie – definitely out of place. The only other unusual addition is just a 1/2 teaspoon of sugar which kicks up the flavor.

POTATO SOUP WITH LEEK AND CHIVES

Use russets for this soup since both red potatoes and all-purpose potatoes don't deliver enough flavor. This soup can be puréed for a more elegant version which is best done before the cream is added. Try using tarragon with this soup for a more interesting flavor combination.

2 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 medium onion cut into 1/4-inch dice, about 1 1/2 cups
1 large leek, white part only, cut into 1/4-inch dice, about 1 cup
1 1/2 pounds potatoes, russet or Yukon gold preferred, peeled and cut into 1/2 inch dice (about 3 russets or 4 Yukon gold)
1/2 teaspoon sugar
3 1/2 cups chicken stock, homemade or Swanson0s preferred
1/2 cup heavy cream
1 tablespoon fresh thyme, tarragon, or other herb
1/2 teaspoon salt or to taste
Freshly ground pepper to taste
1/4 cup finely chopped chives or parsley, for garnish

Heat the butter and oliye oil in a large pot. Add onion and leek and cook, covered, over low heat for about 15 minutes, or until they are very soft but not browned. Add the potatoes, sugar, and stock and bring to a simmer. Cook, until the potatoes are tender about 25 minutes. Add the heavy cream and herbs and cook 5 minutes longer. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Garnish each serving with chives or parsley. Serves 4

Creating a garden with style

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

NATURALISTIC WOODLAND GARDENS

The sweet perfume of heavenly hyacinths mingled with the fresh scent of pine bark mulch as I passed through the doorway of the Rhode Island Convention Center leaving the snow, ice and frigid breezes of winter behind and stepped into the wondrous sights, sounds and smells of springtime. Pretty primroses, handsome hostas, dazzling dogwoods and delphiniums, and wonderful woodland wildflowers were just a few of the horticultural delights on display at the Rhode Island Spring Flower Show this past weekend.

As I closed my eyes to listen to the peaceful sounds of water cascading over rocky waterfalls, I dreamed of springs gone by. The woodland wildflower garden kindled fond memories of the mountain streams of my childhood, growing up in the

Catskills, where lady slippers, jack-in-the pulpit, ferns and trillium abounded. I recalled recent springs in my butterfly meadow, as it burst into bloom alongside my babbling brook with spacious patches of fringed, pink ragged robin, cheerful clumps of ox-eye daisies and glowing masses of golden-yellow buttercups. How I desperately long for spring to arrive so that I may witness the miracle of the garden's rebirth and till the soil once again.

Gratefully, the warmth of the late winter sun has produced several large patches of bare ground in the sunnier portions of my landscape, revealing a few of those springtime miracles. The telltale tips of crocus and daffodil foliage have started to push their way up through the crusty earth while nearby, the silvery, silken catkins have emerged on the contorted branches of the Japanese fan-tail willow which twist and turn to form fascinating curlicues. Despite Mother Nature's persistent reminders that the winter season is far from over, these harbingers of spring are beginning to offer promise that springtime flowers may soon appear.

Our local spring flower shows are an ideal opportunity to explore a variety of garden styles, as each year talented designers, nurseries, horticultural organizations and agricultural schools display their interpretation of the show's theme. From formal gardens adorned with statuary, urns and geometric designs to naturalistic woodland gardens and seascapes, there is always an exhibit which is sure to inspire and might suggest an appropriate theme garden for your own property.

Naturalistic gardens are a popular theme at the flower shows and can be readily adapted to many home landscapes. While most gardeners realize that a no-maintenance garden does not really exist, many habitat gardens can be low-maintenance once planted and established. The use of native plants, trees and shrubs in the landscape, assuming they are appropriate to the light and soil conditions which are present, reduces the need for constant care, as they are particularly adapted to survive our weather extremes.

Given a shady site, especially on a wooded lot of deciduous trees, winding paths bordered by ferns, native wildflowers, spring-flowering bulbs, and shade-loving trees, shrubs and perennials, make a very practical and attractive solution to a challenging location. Should you wish to adopt a woodland garden theme, it is important to identify the types of trees which predominate. Tree roots, especially those of beech and maple, compete for nutrients and moisture and during periods of drought. Supplemental moisture may be required, particularly during periods of drought, to ensure the survival of plants which prefer damp conditions. You may want to consider removing some of the smaller trees and saplings in addition to pruning the lower branches and thinning out the overhead canopy to enable more light to filter through to promote flowering.

Many shade-loving plants are woodland flora by nature and prefer fluffy, woodsy soil, mildly acid, rich and light with a high humus content. Ideal shade garden soil should contain two parts humus (compost, peat or leaf mold), one part sand and one part loam. Soil can be mixed and mounded over tree roots to expedite planting but should not come in contact with tree trunks as it may lead to their demise.

Foliage becomes the dominant feature in shady gardens. Contrast in color, form and texture is essential. Repetition of these elements creates rhythm, drawing the eye through your design. The addition of evergreen shrubs and perennials will provide winter interest.

Take your cues from nature. Visit Garden in the Woods in Framingham, which is the New England Wildflower Society's display garden, or our local nature preserves for ideas. Mark your calendar for the New England Spring Flower Show sponsored by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society at the Bayside Expo, March 17-25. Their theme, "The Inspired Garden," is sure to suggest themes for your personal landscape as well as offering a welcome breath of springtime splendor.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 21

This is a wonderful day for vacationing. On the other hand, if you are working with others, you can be most effective. All team sports, community endeavors, group efforts get the green light. The moon continues to travel in freedom-oriented Aquarius and forms easy contacts to Venus, Pluto and Mercury. In addition, an applying alignment of the sun and Mars adds an energy boost but warns against fast driving, risk taking.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 22

Take it slow and easy this morning. Stay alert and use common sense. The Aquarius moon forms a challenging contact to Saturn at 7:18 a.m. and becomes inactive. A 90-degree alignment of the sun to Mars can spark arguments, power struggles, impulsive action. Others may be irritable, moody. The dark side of a new moon is a time for cleaning out, letting go, making way for new starts. Take extra quiet time out for yourself; reflect on and learn from past experiences. The moon enters Pisces at 5:45 p.m.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 23

The new moon culminates at 3:21 a.m., when the sun and moon conjoin at 5-degrees Pisces. The light side of a new moon brings a time for new beginnings. However, it is best to put new ventures on hold until Sunday, when Mercury turns direct. Because Mercury is slowing its rates of motion, the next couple of days may be hectic. Unexpected setbacks, breakdowns or changes in plans are likely. Slow down and pay extra attention to details.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24

The combination of a Pisces moon and applying Venus/Pluto alignment makes this day prime for creativity. You can find fresh inspiration and add new depth, dimension to artistic projects. Follow your intuition; your instincts are on target. Romance is in the air this evening. Spend quality time with the love in your life.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 25

The moon enters Aries at 5:20 a.m., and generates high energy and enthusiasm today and tomorrow. The big news, however, is that the planet Mercury turns direct at 10:41 a.m., and the green light goes on for new starts across the board. You can launch new ventures, make important decisions, purchases. A harmonious Mercury/Venus alignment makes this a time for meeting people, developing new friendships. Put on your party hat and let the good times roll tonight. The next Mercury retrograde period will occur in June.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 26

Get an early start to this day. Influences are prime for new beginnings in your business and personal life. Take advantage of the favorable planetary aspects for launching ventures this period brings. New is in; old is out. The Aries moon forms easy contacts to Pluto, Mercury and Venus in the morning. At 11:34 p.m. the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 27

Organize your time carefully and stick to your game plan, if you want to be productive today. The moon continues its travel in Aries, but it is inactive until 3:06 p.m. That means that you should finish projects already begun and prepare for new starts tomorrow. The moon enters Taurus at 3:06 p.m., setting the stage for a relaxing evening.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 28

The combination of a Taurus moon and applying Mars/Neptune alignment places the focus on creative pursuits. You can make gains developing music, photography, arts and crafts projects. Beautify your surroundings; add color, texture, plants or flowers. It is okay to initiate new activities. Let rest and relaxation top your agenda this evening .

Dance review steps over to Massasoit

stepping music-dance revue makes its New England debut this Friday (February 23) at Massasoit College's Buckley Performing Arts Center at 8 p.m.

"I got the idea for SwingDance America a couple of years ago after I went to a swing dance competition on Staten Island near where I live," said Trilling, "and I was very surprised and shocked by the different styles that the swingdancing encompassed. I found out that not all the dancing was fast and high-energy, some of it was very slow and sensual."

"As far as I knew, none of this type of dancing had ever been presented in a theatrical setting. So I began talking to people I knew and meeting other people in the swing dance community, including dancers, Broadway choreographers, historians and so on, and found some people interested in forming a partnership to put a show like this together. We began holding auditions about a year ago and eventually put together our permanent cast for the show. One thing I learned from that whole experience is that not everyone can just walk into a dance studio and pick up swing dancing. It's a very complicated form of dancing that takes a lot of work to master," Trilling said.

SwingDance America debuted before a live audience on Staten Island Aug. 15. The show has maintained a 10-member core cast in its first few months, but, as Trilling notes, it never operates on a set format from one performance to the next. The show changes its program in spots for every venue, specifically for the logistics of the venue, and even recruits area dancers and dance coaches to join the cast and/or company for the evening.

The production lives up to the diversity of swingdancing with a richly varied presentation, featuring a broad mix of dance solos, duets, small group and full company numbers. The music runs the gamut from early jazz to blues to rock and rhythm & blues to popular songs from each era of contemporary music, and the dance numbers are interspersed with exchanges of American era or regional dialogue, which Trilling describes as very personable, and creates a seamless, cohesive blend for the show altogether.

SwingDance America is described as a personable, exuberant celebration of swing dance, covering the range of the music and its history from its roots in the 1920s through today.

The program also swings and strolls through a succession of distinct, theme-based segments, kicking off with "Today's Swing Dance Craze" and dance numbers set to songs by Big Bad Voodoo Daddy, Indigo Swing and the Royal Crown Revue, then turning to pay appropriate tribute to the original rave with "The Roots of Swing," featuring the legendary 1920s, 30s and 40s dances such as the Charleston, Lindy Hop and Jitterbug and the Big Band Era with the music of Louis Armstrong, Duke Ellington, Benny Goodman and others. There are also spotlights for the Rock and Roll Era, with music ranging from Louis Jordan to Bill Haley and Elvis Presley, and for Regional Styles, showcasing provincial moves such as the Carolina Shag, Dallas Push, East and West Coast Swing, Jive, Boogie Woogie and even Hip-Hop.

"The variety of dancing we present crosses many generations and styles of music, and we try to present it in a way that we believe encompasses the American spirit. What audiences tend to least expect when they come to the show is the diversity, how swing dancing can go from being wild and hysterical to smooth and sophisticated. In the Carolina Shag, for instance, the woman is supposed to dance and not spill her drink while in motion," Trilling said

"The way that swing dancing has diversified from one era to the next and one region to the next, we see it altogether as the definitive American folk dance," Trilling said. Even with such wide diversity over the eras of swing dance, its evolution has always followed a seamless and natural course.

"There's much more similarity than anyone would ever imagine between the Lindy Hop and Hip Hop," Trilling said.

SwingDance America will be performed at Massasoit's Buckley Performing Arts Center on Friday, Feb. 28 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $18, $16 for Massasoit students with ID and for senior citizens. For more information call (508) 427-1234.

Potato soup

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Everyone knows that soups make quick and easy dinners yet most of us stick to the run-of-the-mill variations such as vegetable, chicken noodle, or tomato. Few of us have made potato soup, a staple of many cuisines, which is hearty and, if well made, also complex. The problem is achieving just the right texture - creamy rather than slippery - as well as enhancing flavors so that the soup does not turn out bland.

The first issue was the selection of the potatoes. I tried low starch (red), medium starch (all-purpose and Yukon gold), as well as high starch (russet) potatoes. The red potatoes were the worst of the lot - they didn't offer enough body to the soup and their texture was 'slippery.' In addition, their sweet flavor was not enough of a balance to the heavy cream. Next, I tried all-purpose and they were too bland. The texture was decent but the flavor was unremarkable. Yukon golds, if you enjoy their distinctive flavor and yellow color, were good (I find their strong and slightly unusual flavor to be a bit overpowering for this recipe) but the russets offered the most body and their earthiness was a welcome addition to what could be a very dull main course recipe. This recipe needs big potato flavor and the russets deliver.

The onion is no surprise nor is the addition of leek as the pairing of potato and leek is a French classic. I had decided early on to use a balance of chicken stock and heavy cream and finally settled on 3 1/2 cups of stock to 1/2 cup heavy cream. I did not want to overpower the potatoes with too much dairy. I also tested half-and-half and light cream but the soup was too milky. The addition of one tablespoon of herbs to the soup while it simmers and then a healthy dose of raw herbs to garnish just before serving brightened the flavor considerably. I also tried adding a couple of tablespoons lemon juice but it tasted like anchovies in a slice of apple pie – definitely out of place. The only other unusual addition is just a 1/2 teaspoon of sugar which kicks up the flavor.

POTATO SOUP WITH LEEK AND CHIVES

Use russets for this soup since both red potatoes and all-purpose potatoes don't deliver enough flavor. This soup can be puréed for a more elegant version which is best done before the cream is added. Try using tarragon with this soup for a more interesting flavor combination.

2 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 medium onion cut into 1/4-inch dice, about 1 1/2 cups
1 large leek, white part only, cut into 1/4-inch dice, about 1 cup
1 1/2 pounds potatoes, russet or Yukon gold preferred, peeled and cut into 1/2 inch dice (about 3 russets or 4 Yukon gold)
1/2 teaspoon sugar
3 1/2 cups chicken stock, homemade or Swanson◊s preferred
1/2 cup heavy cream
1 tablespoon fresh thyme, tarragon, or other herb
1/2 teaspoon salt or to taste
Freshly ground pepper to taste
1/4 cup finely chopped chives or parsley, for garnish

Heat the butter and oliye oil in a large pot. Add onion and leek and cook, covered, over low heat for about 15 minutes, or until they are very soft but not browned. Add the potatoes, sugar, and stock and bring to a simmer. Cook, until the potatoes are tender about 25 minutes. Add the heavy cream and herbs and cook 5 minutes longer. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Garnish each serving with chives or parsley. Serves 4

The sweet perfume of heavenly hyacinths mingled with the fresh scent of pine bark mulch as I passed through the doorway of the Rhode Island Convention Center leaving the snow, ice and frigid breezes of winter behind and stepped into the wondrous sights, sounds and smells of springtime. Pretty primroses, handsome hostas, dazzling dogwoods and delphiniums, and wonderful woodland wildflowers were just a few of the horticultural delights on display at the Rhode Island Spring Flower Show this past weekend.

As I closed my eyes to listen to the peaceful sounds of water cascading over rocky waterfalls, I dreamed of springs gone by. The woodland wildflower garden kindled fond memories of the mountain streams of my childhood, growing up in the Catskills, where lady slippers, jack-in-the pulpit, ferns and trillium abounded. I recalled recent springs in my butterfly meadow, as it burst into bloom alongside my babbling brook with spacious patches of fringed, pink ragged robin, cheerful clumps of ox-eye daisies and glowing masses of golden-yellow buttercups. How I desperately long for spring to arrive so that I may witness the miracle of the garden's rebirth and till the soil once again.

Green thumbs up

Gratefully, the warmth of the late winter sun has produced several large patches of bare ground in the sunnier portions of my landscape, revealing a few of those springtime miracles. The telltale tips of crocus and daffodil foliage have started to push their way up through the crusty earth while nearby, the silvery, silken catkins have emerged on the contorted branches of the Japanese fan-tail willow which twist and turn to form fascinating curlicues. Despite Mother Nature's persistent reminders that the winter season is far from over, these harbingers of spring are beginning to offer promise that springtime flowers may soon appear.

Our local spring flower shows are an ideal opportunity to explore a variety of garden styles, as each year talented designers, nurseries, horticultural organizations and agricultural schools display their interpretation of the show's theme. From formal gardens adorned with statuary, urns and geometric designs to naturalistic woodland gardens and seascapes, there is always an exhibit which is sure to inspire and might suggest an appropriate theme garden for your own property.

Naturalistic gardens are a popular theme at the flower shows and can be readily adapted to many home landscapes. While most gardeners realize that a no-maintenance garden does not really exist, many habitat gardens can be low-maintenance once planted and established. The use of native plants, trees and shrubs in the landscape, assuming they are appropriate to the light and soil conditions which are present, reduces the need for constant care, as they are particularly adapted to survive our weather extremes.

Given a shady site, especially on a wooded lot of deciduous trees, winding paths bordered by ferns, native wildflowers, spring-flowering bulbs, and shade-loving trees, shrubs and perennials, make a very practical and attractive solution to a challenging location. Should you wish to adopt a woodland garden theme, it is important to identify the types of trees which predominate. Tree roots, especially those of beech and maple, compete for nutrients and moisture and during periods of drought. Supplemental moisture may be required, particularly during periods of drought, to ensure the survival of plants which prefer damp conditions. You may want to consider removing some of the smaller trees and saplings in addition to pruning the lower branches and thinning out the overhead canopy to enable more light to filter through to promote flowering.

Many shade-loving plants are woodland flora by nature and prefer fluffy, woodsy soil, mildly acid, rich and light with a high humus content. Ideal shade garden soil should contain two parts humus (compost, peat or leaf mold), one part sand and one part loam. Soil can be mixed and mounded over tree roots to expedite planting but should not come in contact with tree trunks as it may lead to their demise.

Foliage becomes the dominant feature in shady gardens. Contrast in color, form and texture is essential. Repetition of these elements creates rhythm, drawing the eye through your design. The addition of evergreen shrubs and perennials will provide winter interest.

Take your cues from nature. Visit Garden in the Woods in Framingham, which is the New England Wildflower Society's display garden, or our local nature preserves for ideas. Mark your calendar for the New England Spring Flower Show sponsored by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society at the Bayside Expo, March 17-25. Their theme, "The Inspired Garden," is sure to suggest themes for your personal landscape as well as offering a welcome breath of springtime splendor.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 21
This is a wonderful day for vacationing. On the other hand, if you are working with others, you can be most effective. All team sports, community endeavors, group efforts get the green light. The moon continues to travel in freedom-oriented Aquarius and forms easy contacts to Venus, Pluto and Mercury. In addition, an applying alignment of the sun and Mars adds an eriergy boost but warns against fast driving, risk taking.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 22
Take it slow and easy this morning. Stay alert and use common sense. The Aquarius moon forms a challenging contact to Saturn at 7:18 a.m. and becomes inactive. A 90-degree alignment of the sun to Mars can spark arguments, power struggles, impulsive action. Others may be irritable, moody. The dark side of a new moon is a time for cleaning out, letting go, making way for new starts. Take extra quiet time out for yourself; reflect on and learn from past experiences. The moon enters Pisces at 5:45 p.m.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 23
The new moon culminates at 3:21 a.m., when the sun and moon conjoin at 5-degrees Pisces. The light side of a new moon brings a time for new beginnings. However, it is best to put new ventures on hold until Sunday, when Mercury turns direct. Because Mercury is slowing its rates of motion, the next couple of days may be hectic. Unexpected setbacks, breakdowns or changes in plans are likely. Slow down and pay extra attention to details.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24
The combination of a Pisces moon and applying Venus/Pluto alignment makes this day prime for creativity. You can find fresh inspiration and add new depth, dimension to artistic projects. Follow your intuition; your instincts are on target. Romance is in the air this evening. Spend quality time with the love in your life.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 25
The moon enters Aries at 5:20 a.m., and generates high energy and enthusiasm today and tomorrow. The big news, however, is that the planet Mercury turns direct at 10:41 a.m., and the green light goes on for new starts across the board. You can launch new ventures, make important decisions, purchases. A harmonious Mercury/Venus alignment makes this a time for meeting people, developing new friendships. Put on your party hat and let the good times roll tonight. The next Mercury retrograde period will occur in June.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 26
Get an early start to this day. Influences are prime for new beginnings in your business and personal life. Take advantage of the favorable planetary aspects for launching ventures this period brings. New is in; old is out. The Aries moon forms easy contacts to Pluto, Mercury and Venus in the morning. At 11:34 p.m. the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 27
Organize your time carefully and stick to your game plan, if you want to be productive today. The moon continues its travel in Aries, but it is inactive until 3:06 p.m. That means that you should finish projects already begun and prepare for new starts tomorrow. The moon enters Taurus at 3:06 p.m., setting the stage for a relaxing evening.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 28
The combination of a Taurus moon and applying Mars/Neptune alignment places the focus on creative pursuits. You can make gains developing music, photography, arts and crafts projects. Beautify your surroundings; add color, texture, plants or flowers. It is okay to initiate new activities. Let rest and relaxation top your agenda this evening .

stepping music-dance revue makes its New England debut this Friday (February 23) at Massasoit College's Buckley Performing Arts Center at 8 p.m.

"I got the idea for SwingDance America a couple of years ago after I went to a swing dance competition on Staten Island near where I live," said Trilling, "and I was very surprised and shocked by the different styles that the swingdancing encompassed. I found out that not all the dancing was fast and high-energy, some of it was very slow and sensual."

"As far as I knew, none of this type of dancing had ever been presented in a theatrical setting. So I began talking to people I knew and meeting other people in the swing dance community, including dancers, Broadway choreographers, historians and so on, and found some people interested in forming a partnership to put a show like this together. We began holding auditions about a year ago and eventually put together our permanent cast for the show. One thing I learned from that whole experience is that not everyone can just walk into a dance studio and pick up swing dancing. It's a very complicated form of dancing that takes a lot of work to master," Trilling said.

SwingDance America debuted before a live audience on Staten Island Aug. 15. The show has maintained a 10-member core cast in its first few months, but, as Trilling notes, it never operates on a set format from one performance to the next. The show changes its program in spots for every venue, specifically for the logistics of the venue, and even recruits area dancers and dance coaches to join the cast and/or company for the evening.

The production lives up to the diversity of swingdancing with a richly varied presentation, featuring a broad mix of dance solos, duets, small group and full company numbers. The music runs the gamut from early jazz to blues to rock and rhythm & blues to popular songs from each era of contemporary music, and the dance numbers are interspersed with exchanges of American era or regional dialogue, which Trilling describes as very personable, and creates a seamless, cohesive blend for the show altogether.

SwingDance America is described as a personable, exuberant celebration of swing dance, covering the range of the music and its history from its roots in the 1920s through today.

The program also swings and strolls through a succession of distinct, theme-based segments, kicking off with "Today's Swing Dance Craze" and dance numbers set to songs by Big Bad Voodoo Daddy, Indigo Swing and the Royal Crown Revue, then turning to pay appropriate tribute to the original rave with "The Roots of Swing," featuring the legendary 1920s, 30s and 40s dances such as the Charleston, Lindy Hop and Jitterbug and the Big Band Era with the music of Louis Armstrong, Duke Ellington, Benny Goodman and others. There are also spotlights for the Rock and Roll Era, with music ranging from Louis Jordan to Bill Haley and Elvis Presley, and for Regional Styles, showcasing provincial moves such as the Carolina Shag, Dallas Push, East and West Coast Swing, Jive, Boogie Woogie and even Hip-Hop.

"The variety of dancing we present crosses many generations and styles of music, and we try to present it in a way that we believe encompasses the American spirit. What audiences tend to least expect when they come to the show is the diversity, how swing dancing can go from being wild and hysterical to smooth and sophisticated. In the Carolina Shag, for instance, the woman is supposed to dance and not spill her drink while in motion," Trilling said

"The way that swing dancing has diversified from one era to the next and one region to the next, we see it altogether as the definitive American folk dance," Trilling said. Even with such wide diversity over the eras of swing dance, its evolution has always followed a seamless and natural course.

"There's much more similarity than anyone would ever imagine between the Lindy Hop and Hip Hop," Trilling said.

SwingDance America will be performed at Massasoit's Buckley Performing Arts Center on Friday, Feb. 28 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $18, $16 for Massasoit students with ID and for senior citizens. For more information call (508) 427-1234.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN
by Kathleen Fox ASID

TUNE IN

Last June I decided to take a break from writing columns for the summer. I wasn't planning to relax, however! I began a remodeling project on my own master bedroom suite, adding a bathroom and redecorating. This project, as well as work on my client's homes, have kept me too busy to get back to writing. The previous summer I had remodeled the kitchen, breakfast room, dining room, and powder room. It was very exciting this fall to be selected by Home and Garden television to have these projects filmed.

The completed master suite will appear on HGTV (channel 32), Bed and Bath at 10:30pm Saturday, March 3, and the kitchen on Kitchen Design at 9:00pm Friday, March 23.

At this time of year, most of us are thinking SPRING, and planning projects large and small to breath new life into our homes. Tune in to HGTV and get some ideas that you might incorporate into your own projects!

The kitchen and master suite are areas of our homes where most of us spend a great deal of time. If you feel that your rooms do not work well for your needs, or that they need a face lift, call The Designing Woman at (781) 383-6411 to schedule a consultation. We look forward to helping you with all of your design projects.

Road to success at business network

Christa Hagearty

Cohasset residents Christa Hagearty, president of Dependable Cleaners, and former State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, will be two of the featured speakers at The South Shore Woman's Business Network's THRIVE! event, to be held Thursday, March 8, at Lombardo's in Randolph.

This year's theme will be "2001: A Woman's Odyssey," which will highlight the paths taken by five prominent businesswomen on the road to success.

As the president of Dependable Cleaners, Hagearty oversees operations of 16 Dependable stores, serving the South Shore and Boston. She is the third generation president of this booming company. From the political arena will be Murray, a former member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, who has remained active in Republican politics since her recent retirement from office.

Other guests will be entrepreneur Mary Lou Andre, founder and president of the Needham-based "Organization By Design." This organization advises individuals and organizations on the power of appropriate dress in different situations. Shellie Lawlor founder and CEO of eKindness.com, will also be interviewed. Through community development and innovative marketing partnerships, Lawlor has built a number foundation for women's self-help/ spiritual network online. Also on the panel will be Bella English, a reporter and columnist for the Boston Globe. Kathleen Hassan, an inspirational speaker, will serve as facilitator of the event.

Registration for "2001: A Woman's Odyssey" begins at 11:30 a.m. on March 8, with silent auction bidding throughout the day, and informal networking among guests. There will be a buffet luncheon at noon. At 1:30 p.m. the "2001: A Woman's Odyssey "begins, and finally the day will end with coffee and dessert which leads into check-out. Portions of the proceeds of the silent auction are donated to The SSWBN Marion Overhiser Scholarship Fund. For more information call the SSWBN at (781) 749-8883.

Mending fences

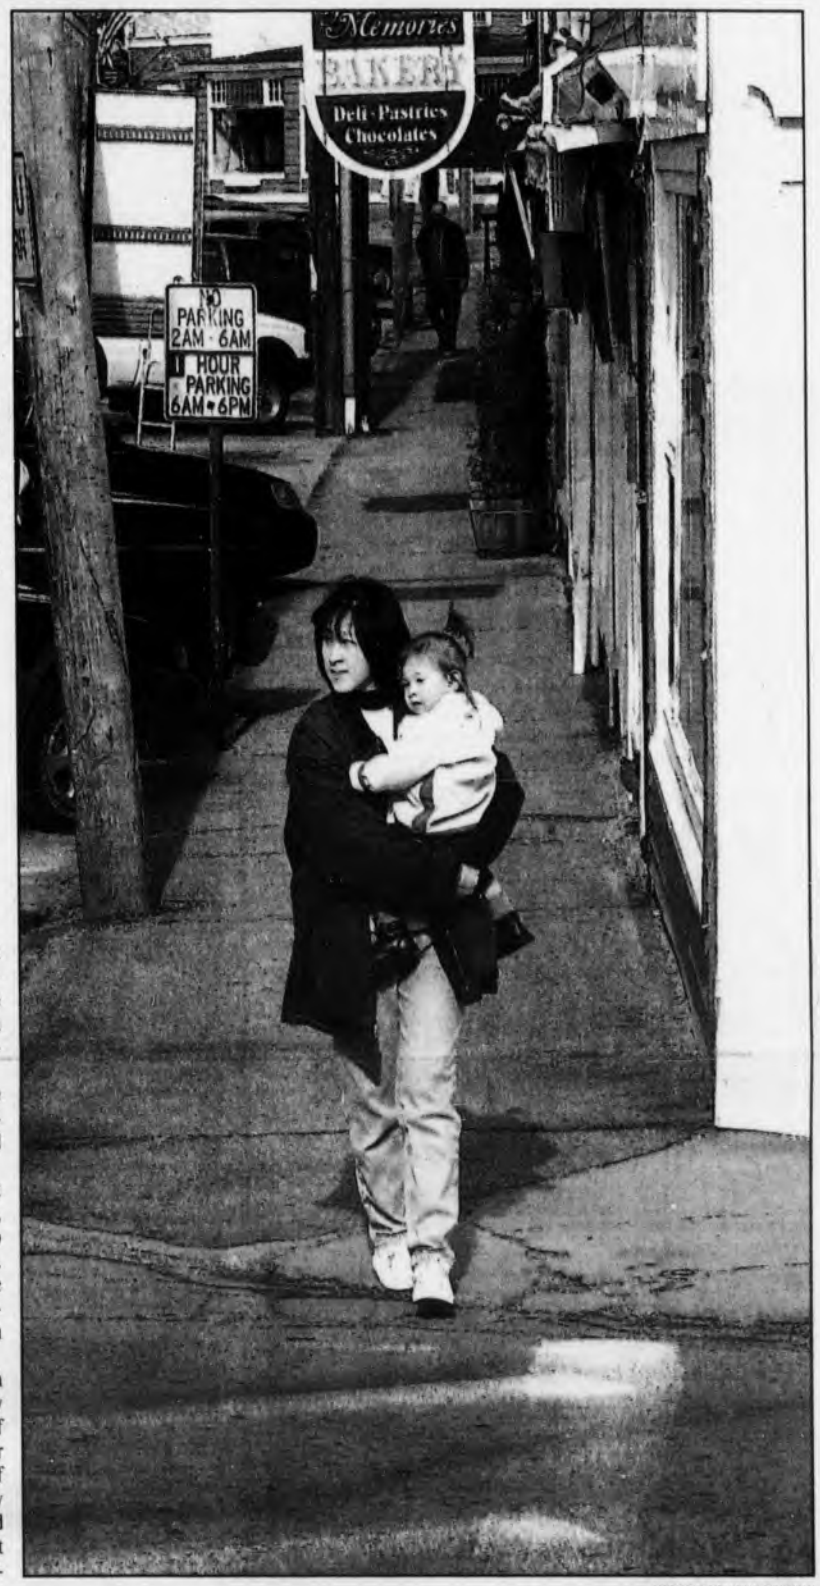
Support for village revitalization grows

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A new petition circulating around town is trying to mend fences with the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, the private, non-profit group formed to get village improvements moving.

And results of a survey conducted by CRC show many in town want to see the village infrastructure fixed up.

"Instead of fighting about whether to do this or not, now we're debating about what type of bricks we're going to have in the sidewalk."
— Andrea Giroux, Atlantic Avenue



These developments are in sharp contrast to criticism of the new corporation in an earlier petition that aired concerns about private business interests in the harbor, village area and said selectmen should take the leadership role in any revitalization effort.

Andrea Giroux of Atlantic Avenue is one of those circulating the new "let's at least listen" petitions, that have reportedly garnered dozens of signatures throughout the town.

"The petition isn't saying the CRC is right and should be able to do what they want, just, let's listen and use their willingness to dedicate money and time," she said. "There's no denying the town needs some shaping up. You look at the charming-looking homes, and the store fronts and you might miss the dangerous curb sides."

Replacing current curbs is an idea with vast support, according to a recent survey taken by the CRC. Dean Rizzo, director of the corporation that is backed by harbor businessman Peter Roy, said 82 percent of the 150 people who responded said they were in support of new sidewalks and improved street lights. He did note that though people were in favor of new streetlights, most respondents cringed at the term

North Scituate train station stalled for now

Selectmen fear traffic flood to Cohasset stop

By Alice Coyle and Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset selectmen are now looking to plead their case before Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan, following news that the MBTA would be willing to eliminate the proposed 400-space North Scituate station as part of that town's mitigation package for Greenbush restoration.

On Tuesday night, selectmen voiced concern over what would happen to the 400 cars that were slated to park in North Scituate — specifically, how many of those cars would drive north to Cohasset.

"It's going to put more pressure on our traffic and on our lot."
— Selectmen Chairman Tom Callahan

"Those 400 cars have to go somewhere," said Selectman Merle Brown.

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said he was "quite alarmed," by the potential flood of commuters heading north to Cohasset's station and its 410-space parking lot.

"It's going to put more pressure on our traffic and on our lot," he said.

Signature count to be challenged

Would affect citizens petitions

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Is it a threat to old-fashioned Town Hall democracy?

Or a way to weed out frivolous, unsupported articles?

That's what Cohasset voters will decide about a proposed bylaw change that would require a citizens' petition to have 100 signatures in order to be placed on an annual Town Meeting agenda, instead of the present ten.

The article, which ironically is a citizens' petition signed by ten people, is being pushed by Jerusalem Road resident Lucia Woods, who said she sees no reason why the number of signatures required for an annual Town Meeting article – ten – shouldn't be the same amount needed for a special Town Meeting article –100.

An article is matter of business to be discussed before a Town Meeting.

In the summary she submitted with the article, Woods argued by increasing the number of required signatures to 100, the article will "have greater support from the town before it comes to the meeting." She also said "In a town of approximately 5,000 voters, 100 signatures (2 percent of the registered voters), is not unreasonable,

3A site eyed for new police/fire station

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Police/Fire Building Committee has asked the Trustees of Reservations about a possible land swap that would give the town land on Route 3A for a new police and fire station, and give the preservation group a parcel of town-owned land near the Hingham line.

Though nothing has been etched in stone, Town Manager Mark Haddad said it is one of the options being examined.

Haddad said the committee, which includes Police Chief Brian Noonan and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, has been analyzing the need to replace or expand the current Elm Street joint location, and has come to the conclusion it "won't be feasible to do anything at the current location."

Noonan, speaking just for the police department, said a Route 3A location "gives us better access to any area of town than where we are right now. We have no town square to contend with and Route 3A leads us north and south and gives us access to all the streets, to the shore, and Beechwood."

The land being eyed is on the southbound side of Route 3A, between Sohier Street and King Street. Haddad said the town would only look to swap a couple acres of land.

In a letter sent to the Trustees of Reservations, Building Commissioner and committee member Robert Egan said the committee "keeps coming back to the basic problem; that none of the town-owned parcels are centrally located." The letter continued, "The committee would respectfully request that the Trustees of Reservations consider a 'land swap' for a suitable sized parcel of land at the intersection of Route 3A and 'upper' King Street. The town owns several parcels contiguous to Thayer Woods further north on Route 3A that may be valuable to the Trustees."

Egan said until the committee finds a location, not much more work can be done in terms of the design process. As of Wednesday, the Trustees had received the letter, but not made a decision.

Learning how not to grow up

Musical revue features all-kid cast

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Do you ever want to go back to the days when you purposely tried not to eat your vegetables or wanted to fake being sick so you could stay home?

If so, then "How to Eat Like a Child" could be just the ticket for a wonderful trip down Memory Lane to get back in touch with your inner child.

"Although it's billed as a kids' show, adults will look at the skits and be reminded of when they were children."
— Jean Di Giacomandrea, Cohasset Dramatic Club

The 24-member cast in the Cohasset Dramatic Club production ranges in age from 5-15 years and hails from Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield and Quincy. The show opens at 7:30 p.m., Friday at Cohasset Town Hall.

Club president Jean Di Giacomandrea says the audience won't be disappointed by the fast-paced musical review.

"It's a romp through the joys and sorrows of being a child," says Di Giacomandrea of Scituate.

She explains the show is a series of musical lessons about how not to grow up — including everything from how to beg for a dog to how to stay up past bedtime.

"The show is very uplifting," Di Giacomandrea says. "Although it's billed as a kids' show, adults will look at the skits and be reminded of when they were children."

State keeps shellfish beds closed

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

In an announcement that should come as no surprise to Cohasset residents, the state Division of Marine Fisheries reissued the ban on shellfishing in Little Harbor and Whales Meadow, off Atlantic Avenue.

But there shouldn't be much of an impact on the town's shellfishing industry — this year's high school seniors weren't even born when the beds were first closed.

"They've been closed since 1978, I have nothing to do," said town shellfish constable Clifford Dickson about the town post.

Neil Churchill, a biologist with the state, said high coliform counts are the cause for the closure. "This is not a new closure," he said. "It's a reissue of a closure. Under state law, we have to send out a notice each year."

Town health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik, said the closure indicates a "potential danger" if someone eats the shellfish, mainly clams and quahogs in Cohasset. He didn't know what would happen if someone ate a clam from Whales Meadow, but said he doesn't doubt that people still do despite the closure. But the fact there is a potential health risk due to high coliform counts, calls for the closure.

"We're covering ourselves legally," said Churchill.

Fecal coliform is bacteria resulting from human or animal waste.

"This is not a new closure. It's a reissue of a closure. Under state law, we have to send out a notice each year."
— Neil Churchill, state biologist

The high bacteria counts in Little Harbor are no surprise to town environmentalists. The area surrounding the inlet is not on the sewer, and failing septic systems have resulted in high bacteria counts for years. The area is now being looked at as part of an expansion of the central Cohasset sewer district. A recent feasibility study projected the cost of installing sewers in Little Harbor at nearly $11 million.

However, in Whales Meadow, a salt marsh area tucked between Atlantic Avenue and White Head Road, the cause of the pollution is more uncertain. "We're still trying to figure out that problem," Churchill said. "There's no point source [such as a leaking septic system or out-fall pipe] that we can prove."

Godzik said there was a "good chance it's coming from animals."

Shellfishing is allowed on the coastline, except for Sandy Cove which is closed, and in part of Cohasset Harbor – however there isn't much in terms of shellfish in those locations.

Interestingly, shellfishing is allowed on Bassing Beach in Scituate (opposite the Cohasset Sailing Club in the harbor). The town line goes through Bailey's Creek. Churchill said because of the old sewer out-fall pipe in Cohasset Harbor, the harbor's bacteria count is too high until you get near the breakwater. He said the counts near the yacht club are "reasonable" and are "clean" at the beach. "You have to draw the line somewhere," Churchill said.

Selectman Merle Brown said he lobbied Scituate to issue shellfishing licenses to Cohasset residents for $20 – the same rate Scituate residents pay – instead of the current $50.

"More from our town use it than Scituate," he said.

Brown said shellfishing in town used to be popular, with "quite a few" town clammers.

Dickson said Little Harbor and Whales Meadow were used commercially, until the Blizzard of '78 "opened up a few septic systems." Neither Brown nor Dickson thinks Little Harbor will be opened until the area is on the sewer, but Brown is holding out hope for Whales Meadow in the near future.

Until then Dickson and fellow constables Rocco Laugelle and Stephen Wigmore have nothing much to do besides chasing out poachers trying to harvest illegally.

"I'm out of business," Dickson said

Town Manager Mark Haddad told Selectmen Tuesday night he had met with the town's Board of Assessors to discuss possible market impacts to properties along the Greenbush right-of-way. He said the combined loss of assessed value would be approximately $35,000, but that the town's tax revenue base wouldn't change.

Haddad said the town can still increase the levy limit by 2 1/2 percent a year, but that the extra $35,000 would be spread out through all town properties.

He also said the board is looking at sales rates of houses along existing commuter rail lines, and in Scituate along the Greenbush right-of-way

Historic district commission to look at possible violation

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Common Historic Commission is looking into a possible violation of the district's bylaws, in regards to two new windows installed recently at 63 Highland Ave.

Last week, during an interior renovation of the two-story white house, contractors installed two windows on the north side of the house, bought in 1999 by Charles Furtado. This week, commission member and the former owner of the house, L. Emmett Holt, and Highland Avenue resident Carolyn Horn, told new commission chairman Jacqueline Clark that Furtado had violated the district's bylaw that requires any exterior work done to a house in the historic district first receive approval by the commission.

But Fortado contends the work didn't need commission approval, and even if it did, the windows didn't constitute a significant change in the structure's appearance.

Clark, also a Highland Avenue resident, said the Cohasset Common Historic Commission has been in effect "for a long time" and that its purpose is to "preserve the exterior architecture of the properties."

Homes visible from Cohasset Common and certain designated homes along North Main Street fall under the jurisdiction of the Cohasset commission. Other similar historical commissions exist for Main Street in Hingham, and for Boston's Back Bay and Beacon Hill.

In two separate letters sent to Clark and other town officials, Holt and Horn, the wife of former commission Chairman and current member Richard Horn, say they had conversations with Furtado last week reminding him not to make any changes to the exterior without approval from the commission.

Holt said Furtado showed him interior renovation work going on in the two-story house's attic on Feb. 13. He said one window on the house's south side could be replaced because the new window was similar to the old. However Holt said he "quickly noted that [two new windows on the north side of the house] could not be installed without a public hearing, and suggested that Furtado get in touch with Horn immediately." Holt said he again reminded Furtado the next day not to let the contractors cut in the new windows. He concluded the letter by saying he had warned Furtado of the requirements twice in two days, before the work was done, and that he "apparently chose to ignore the requirement."

Horn said while her husband was out of town on Feb. 15 she also warned Furtado not to do any work. She said Furtado claimed town Building Inspector Robert Egan had given him the go-ahead Thursday afternoon. Horn also said Furtado "claims he did not understand the procedure for application for historic changes. It is important that the historic district committee keep in mind that ignorance of the town bylaws does not place a resident outside the jurisdiction of these laws."

She also criticized Egan for allegedly giving Furtado authorization to install the two new windows – something Egan denies doing.

"I went up the house to do a framing inspection on the inside, and said the windows were going to be a problem," Egan said. "He said he had already talked to a member."

In a letter written by their attorney, Furtado contends that the work doesn't fall under the jurisdiction of the historical commission. He also contends that Horn had told him it would be all right to do the work; a claim she denies.

"The commission cannot consider architectural features not subject to public view," the letter states. "The Furtados installed the windows at a location that is not open to view from a public street, public park, or public way. Therefore the bylaw does not apply to the window installation, and the Furtados are not required to see a certificate of appropriateness from the commission."

The letter also said the windows didn't constitute a "significant change to the design, material color or outward appearance" of the house.

A photo of 63 Highland Ave. taken from Highland Avenue, near North Main Street, shows the two new attic windows on the north side of the house

Furtado said he is willing to work with the commission to resolve the issue, and will attend any hearing the commission has, along with his architect.

Clark said that in the five years she has been on the commission, it hasn't dealt with a violation. Holt said in his letter that Furtado could be required to restore the exterior of the house to its original condition.

Clark said the commission hopes to hold a meeting in March.

MCAS expands grades tested

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

In an attempt to eliminate test burn-out during this year's Massachusetts Comprehensive Academic Test, the state has spread out the test among the grades.

Starting in April, grades 3 - 8, and grade 10 will takes the test's five parts, instead of just grades four, eight and 10 as was done the previous three years.

In 1998, after fourth graders spent 17 hours, spread over 13 days taking the test, the state Department of Education came under fire from parents and educators saying the test was too long for a nine-year old child. In the two following years the length dropped 11 days to nine.

The new testing format will see fourth graders taking the composition portion of the test as well as the math test. However third graders will now be take the reading test, comprised of language and literature sections, fifth graders will take the science and technology, and history and social science tests, and sixth graders will take the math test.

The new format, said Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan should help the school's scores, which have been lagging behind the scores of their older peers at Cohasset Middle/High School.

"I think it certainly will be more beneficial for the fourth grade," said Callahan. "The amount of days they have to do it is certainly much better."

Said Cohasset School Department Curriculum Coordinator Ruth Fennessey, "Students were exhausted, it was not considered age appropriate. Maybe [the state] listened."

School Committee Chairman Pat Martin not only thinks it will help because of the spread out time, but in identifying curriculum problem areas. "Instead of waiting until the fourth grade to test the K through four curriculum, we'll be able to get more into the minutiae earlier," she said. "I think it's good."

Changes are also afoot for middle school students. The seventh grade will be taking the composition and reading test. However the eighth grade will still take the majority of the test: composition, reading, math, science and technology, and history and social studies. The tenth grade also still has a heavy test load, taking the composition, reading, math and history and social science tests.

Middle/High School Principal Dr. Michael Jones said the test schedule will change again next year for seventh and eighth graders. "This year seventh grade is taking the language arts/English composition test, as is the eighth grade. Next year the eighth grade will not, only the seventh grade," he explained.

Jones said the change will "shorten up the exam" for the eighth grade. "It will help burnout. The test is much too long and it will certainly help the younger students manage the marathon test."

Testing will begin on April 9, and continue staggered amongst the grades until May 25.

A complete testing schedule is available on the state Department of education website www.doe.mass.edu/mcast

Senior class parents plan post-prom party

By Cynthia Dedes
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Calling all parents of seniors. The planning for the post-prom party is underway. A group of parents have met three times since the fall to start things rolling. Preliminary decisions have been made, but there are still many choices to make and projects to organize.

This will be the fourth year that parents have hosted a party after the prom. Decorations and entertainment are planned around a selected theme. The theme is always a surprise, but we can share that during the years, casinos, live bands and caricature artists have been part of the fun.

Support for this activity has come from local businesses, civic organizations and others. Donations of gifts for prizes and raffle items, also monetary donations have made past senior-class celebrations great going-away parties. The class of 2001 is a class made up of great young people. They have excelled academically — remember the MCAS scores. They have been outstanding athletes in all sports — remember how proud we were when they won the 2000 banner for soccer. They have been active in community service projects as well, helping in activities such as the Appalachian Service Project.

If you have some time to give and want to volunteer call: Kay Langham at 383-2748 or Allison Ulmer at 383-2672.

If you would like to help with a monetary donation, send your donation to: Cohasset High School, Post-Prom Party, c/o Steve Langham, 100 Pond St., Cohasset, 02025.

This is a worthwhile event that helps keep the prom goers safe and in a drug- and alcohol-free all-night party.

Valentine luncheon at senior center was extra special

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

HELLO COHASSET

Hello Cohasset. How is everyone after a week of vacation for a lot of us? I have talked to so many of you and heard some great stories, make sure to send in any news of any exciting things you may have done or people that you may have visited from Cohasset. I just wanted to send a reminder to everyone as we enter the sort of slow, draggy month of March. Try to take a little time to talk and visit to all of the elderly people here in town who may be needing a little pick-me-up in their days. It is not too soon to start thinking of Spring cleaning and finding out what little things may be needed by an elderly friend or a person in need.

VALENTINE LUNCHEON

This past Valentines Day, the Cohasset Elder Affairs members held their annual luncheon at the South Shore Community Center. The Cohasset PSO had its hand in making the day a little sweeter with handmade desserts from parents of the Osgood students. The desserts, some of which were adorned with a personal valentine picture, put smiles on everyone's faces. The event also featured the Notre Tones from Notre Dame Academy that serenaded the seniors.

GIRL SCOUT AWARD

Mary McElroy of Windy Hill Road was recently awarded the Girl Scout Alumnae Award and was recognized at an awards ceremony, held on Feb. 25 in Newton. Congratulations to you Mary on this wonderful honor.

LITTLE LEAGUE SIGNUPS

Can you believe it? It is that time of the year again for baseball and softball sign-ups for the Spring season. Little League baseball and Softball registration will be held on March 10 from 9 a.m.-noon at Cohasset Middle-High School for all children who will be at least five years old by August 1. All players, including those already on a Major League team must sign up. Parents are also required to provide a copy of the player's birth certificate if they have not already done so. Please call Lynne or Mark DeGiacomo with any questions you may have, by calling 383-6413.

NEW ARRIVAL

John and Kristin Ryan of Deep Run welcomed the birth of their son, Nicholas John, born on Jan. 1, 2001 at 3:21 a.m. at the Brigham and Women's Hospital. Nicholas weighed in at 7 lbs., 2 oz. and measured 20 inches.

Sounds like Nicholas is going to be an earlier riser. Congratulations all!

SNOW ROW

The Hull Lifesaving Museum hosts the 21st Annual Snow Row at 12:30 p.m., Saturday March 3, at Windmill Point Boathouse, Hull Gut. Rowers who are museum members pay $15, non-members pay $20. Spectators are free. This is a popular event with Cohasset rowers. Call 925-5433 for more information.

Hamlet is a woman in Drama Festival entry

On March 3, Hamlet will utter "To be or not to be?" and those other familiar words we read in high school or heard Mel Gibson or Kenneth Branagh utter on the screen, but there will be a basic difference: they will be delivered by a woman. The audience at the Duxbury High School for the preliminaries of the Massachusetts High School Drama Festival will see Cohasset High School's adaptation of Terrence Ortwein's "And Flights of Angels," a modified version of Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Ortwein's work attempts to make Hamlet more accessible to a broad audience without sacrificing the heart and soul of the play. His preparation of the "new" script began when he worked with students at Choate Rosemary Hall in Wallingford, Conn., to revise Shakespeare's play. After much discussion, some scenes were cut or merged, and lines were (thankfully for many contemporary audience members) deleted. Shakespeare's original vocabulary was left untouched. In July, 1991, theatre students in Choate's summer theatre program worked with Ortwein and Ron Emmons, director of Cohasset's drama program, to further revamp the play, bringing it down to half of its original length, and Emmons, with the permission of the author, has pared it down to just under 40 minutes, the festival time limit.

The title of the revised play, comes from the words of Horatio, Hamlet's only loyal friend, who says after the prince's death, "And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest." Ortwein's adaptation of the play begins at the end of Shakespeare's work. Hamlet, before his death urges Horatio, who is contemplating following his friend into death, to live to tell his story. It is Horatio who then stage manages a retelling of Hamlet's dilemma as it is rehearsed by a group of actors.

Under Emmons' direction a workshop production of the play was done with scripts in the performers' hands and a minimum of costuming, scenery, and props. Because most of the males in the program were needed for other productions that summer, it was decided that the Choate production would present a reversal of the Elizabethan all-male acting company and utilize an all-female cast.

"As I went down to Choate last summer, I had major misgivings about this format, but much to my surprise this became my most successful Choate production," Emmons says. "The audience bought into it completely. When I found that the females greatly outnumbered the males in my program this year, I decided to produce the play here in much the same way."

"When I found that the females greatly outnumbered the males in my program this year, I decided to produce the play here in much the same way."

— Ron Emmons, director

There are differences in this production of "And Flights of Angels," however. The most noticeable of these is the inclusion of males in the cast. The roles of the dying Hamlet and of the original Horatio are played by males; however the acting company that rehearses the retelling of Hamlet's story is made up exclusively of females. Even Horatio, himself, is played by a female while the male who played him in the first scene stays on stage to cue actors' entrances, remind them of their lines, point out stage positions, and move scenery pieces. If this all sounds terribly confusing, be assured that reactions from past audiences indicate quite the opposite to be true; audience members who either have not read Hamlet or have had difficulty with the original play will find this adaptation easier to understand.

Appearing in the cast will be David Ingber, the original Horatio; Ashley Ulmer, the King; Jacqui Dupre, the Queen; Jackie Goines, Hamlet; Kelly Stone, Laertes; Alicia Laas, Polonius; Lydia Guild, Gravedigger; Elizabeth Ingber, Ophelia; Julia Lovallo, Horatio; Jessica Stevermer, the Ghost, Morgan Hurley, Guildenstern; Kelly Hurley, Rosencrantz; Kimberly Ulmer, Player Queen; Maura McKenney, Osric; Brenna O'Donnell, Lucianus and Priest. The assistant director is Ashley Ulmer, art director is Alicia Laas, stage combat director is Jacqui Dupre, and Jeff Gerber is the stage manager. Also assisting with the production is Stew Replogle, a CHS graduate.

The preliminary festival at Duxbury will open with Cohasset's at 9 AM on Saturday, March 3. Tickets for one or all of the plays will be $6. the full day's lineup is as follows:

9 a.m.— Cohasset - And Flights of Angels
10 a.m.— Westwood - Fortress
11 a.m. — Savio Preparatory - Left for Dead
1 p.m. — Wareham - Power of Darkness
2 p.m. — Madison Park - TBA
3 p.m. — Norwood - Largo Desolato
4:30 p.m. — Rockland - Limbo
5:30 p.m. — Duxbury - Cagebirds

"And Flights of Angels" will be the first of two encore productions of director Ron Emmons' last year as head of the Cohasset High School Drama Workshop, a position he has held for 25 years. Since he began his directing career at Neptune High School in 1961, he has directed more than 70 productions. In the spring he will end his Cohasset career with a production of the Drama Workshop's most successful show of all time, the rock-musical "Godspell." He is planning to incorporate cast members from past CHS productions of the musical with current Cohasset High School students. Any CHS alums interested in participating should contact the director at GodspellCHS@aol.com as soon as possible. "Godspell" will be presented in May.

Local options for 'end of life'

Sunday, March 25, from 2 to 5 p.m., the Social Service League will sponsor a panel on local options for life's end, along with Bill Moyers' PBS series "On Our Own Terms" at St. Anthony's parish hall, Summer Street, Cohasset.

This special program, free and open to the public, will be moderated by an oncology nurse and a panel discussion with medical, legal and hospice home representation to discuss local options for life's end. In addition there will be free literature on the topic available.

Refreshments will be served.

The Social Service League of Cohasset, a non-profit community service agency, serves the towns of Cohasset, Hull, Hingham, Scituate and Norwell. President of the league is Motoko Deane of 672 Jerusalem Rd., Cohasset.

For more information and directions call Patricia Carleton, staff social worker, at (781) 383-0771.

Music festival at St. Stephen's

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, now in its tenth year, St. Stephen's Church is presenting a Festival of the Music of Josef Gabriel Rheinberger on Sunday, March 11, at 3 p.m.

Rheinberger (1839-1901) was born in Liechtenstein and taught and composed in Munich. At a time when church music had not much integrity, this composer shone like in a beacon, with a tremendous output of choral, organ, and instrumental music.

St. Stephen's is located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset, is handicap accessible, and has available parking in the nearby village car park. There will be a playing of the 58 bell carillon a half hour before the concert by Sally Slade Warner and a reception will follow the festival. The concert is free of charge, but donations will be accepted. For information, please call (781) 383-1083.

Question of the Week

The Planning Board race in this year's April 7 election promises to be an interesting one. Former selectman Peter Pratt of Ripley Road and Richard Brown of Church Street are vying for the open seat being vacated by Terry Atherton of Clay Spring Road.

Incumbents Pat Martin of Linden Drive and Mark DeGiacomo of Beach Street face a challenge from Adrienne MacCarthy of Doane Street in a three-way race for two seats on the School Committee.

So in keeping with our tradition, we will pose a Question of the Week to local candidates. In the past we have limited the Question to candidates for contested seats, but this year we'll make an exception for the two incumbents running for reelection to the Board of Selectmen. With so much in the news about Greenbush, jet noise, village revitalization and so on, we think our readers would be well served by knowing what Tom Callahan of Hillside Drive and Merle Brown of Beechwood Street have to say on targeted issues.

All candidates — opposed or unopposed — who have not already done so, are invited to submit photographs and formal statements announcing their candidacies.

Starting next week, we will feature candidates' answers to the Question of the Week. Responses should be brief — no more than 250 words — and must be received by 5 p.m. Monday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.)

The following are the first Questions of the Week:

For Planning Board candidates:

What's your stance on allowing two-family homes in town?

For School Committee candidates:

Do you think there is too much emphasis on technology in the lower grades at the expense of other subjects?

For Selectmen candidates:

Has the Town Manager Act stripped the Board of Selectmen of too much power?

Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com by fax at 741-2931 or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. However they choose to deliver their answers, candidates should adhere to the 5 p.m., Monday deadline.

We will also publish a weekly Candidates' Corner, which will be limited to a few paragraphs (about 150 words), from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers and the like.

The Mariner will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues from citizens not seeking election.

If you have questions, or would like to suggest a Question of the Week, call Mary Ford at 741-2933 or contact her by e-mail at mford@cnc.com.

Democrats caucus in Cohasset

Registered Democrats in Cohasset will hold a caucus at the Town Hall March 3, at 10 a.m. to elect five delegates and five alternates to the 2001 Massachusetts Democratic Convention. Delegates will be divided equally between men and women.

The convention will be held Saturday, June 2, at the Springfield Civic Center in Springfield. The caucus is open to all registered Democrats in Cohasset. Candidates for delegate and alternate must consent to nomination in writing. All candidates may make a two-minute statement and may distribute materials on their behalf. All ballots will be written and secret. Those registered Democrats unable to attend may be considered for delegate and alternate by 2/3 of those present and voting. Those not elected as delegate and alternate may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority and disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited. Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed with the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 129 Portland St., Boston, 02114 no later than 10 days after the caucus date.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Train right-of-way

TO THE EDITOR:

Recently we learned from the Mariner that the MBTA will have to pay Cohasset fair market value when it purchases the right of way to be used by the Greenbush Line. According to the town, this could mean up to $2.3 million is received. While this is more than has been anticipated, at this point we really don't know how it compares to the future tax revenues that will be lost to Cohasset as a result of the certain devaluation of the town's property base caused by the train's return.

Up until now, the town has valued the right of way as a simple parcel of real estate. Failing to measure the effect on property values could put the town's long-run financial health into danger. For example, if the town's property tax revenues were to decline by only $200,000 per year because of the train, the present value of the lost tax revenue to the town over the next 30 years could exceed $3 million! And with the very large number of homes in Cohasset that will negatively impacted by the train, this amount is probably conservative. Suddenly $2.3 million doesn't seem like so much.

There is a way that the town can ensure-or at least increase the likelihood of-its future financial health. As it currently stands, those townspeople whose homes are negatively impacted by the train (including my own) will receive no additional protection from the town beyond the paltry measures proposed by the MBTA (essentially, black chain link fences along portions of the right of way), while those townspeople whose homes are not negatively impacted will receive the benefit of train service, as well as share in the funds received from the MBTA. The mitigation measures offered by the MBTA are designed to protect us physically from the train, but will do nothing to protect the value of our homes. If the town wants to preserve its revenue base — as well as its unity — it should invest the funds it receives from the MBTA to provide additional protective measures for property owners beyond those proposed by the MBTA. Any additional measures that the town can take to confine the train's harmful effects to the right of way will only benefit all of the townspeople — landscaping, sound-proof fencing and vibration mats would go a long way towards accomplishing this.

Since the owners of the properties abutting and nearby the right of way are the townspeople who will be most harmed by the train, it stands to reason that any amount that the town receives from the sale of the right of way should be used primarily to reduce their injury. Using the MBTA's funds to limit the train's effects to these properties will benefit the town far more than $2.3 million ever could. I urge readers of this letter to contact the town's selectmen in support of this proposition.

Harbor seat

TO THE EDITOR:

Seems reasonable to grant Mr. Peter Roy his request for a seat on the Harbor Committee (an advisory rather than a regulatory committee). It seems ridiculously unreasonable to deny him a seat just because he owns the three commercial properties on the waterfront, as well as his estate. Surely he has more reason than anyone in town to preserve the beauty and quality of the harbor.

Let us set aside the goofy notion that what might be in his self interest is automatically against the public interest. On the rare occasions where the interests seem not to be concurrent, the regulatory authorities are there to protect the public interest.

Sure, his arrogantly humongous yacht and ham-handed foray into revitalization has aroused the perennial carpers and gossipers, but it would make more sense to welcome his desire for constructive involvement in the town. Most of us have far less to offer, and aren't any closer to perfect.

Citizen petitions

TO THE EDITOR:

For centuries, the New England town meeting has been a bastion of open democracy; an open forum in which citizens can participate in the running of their town government and, most important, a place where citizens can bring their issues directly to the town for a decision. Citizen articles are a positive force in our town government.

This invaluable right of Cohasset residents to submit warrant articles to town meeting is being threatened by an article to be considered on March 31, annual town meeting. This article, submitted by a group of citizens, would increase the number of signatures needed to submit an article from the current requirement of 10 signatures to 100 signatures.

Obviously, it is a lot harder to get 100 signatures than it is to get 10. The effect of this article, if it succeeds, would be to make it much, much harder for citizens to submit articles for town meeting, and would make it much harder for a small group of citizens to put their issue before town meeting.

This might prevent a small group of citizens with a local problem who have been unable to get their issue resolved through the usual channels of town government (for example to get a catch basin installed, to get a water main, to tie into town sewer, to get a culvert repaired) to have their voices heard.

I urge those attending the town meeting to vote to reject this article at the town meeting.

My first thought I will leave unsaid…

My second thought was not to respond…

My third thought was a responsibility to respond on behalf of the many wonderful parents who participate in our program each year as volunteers and coaches.

This spring the Cohasset Soccer Club will field 73 teams consisting of over 700 players organized and led by over 100 adult coaches and volunteers. The same is true of the baseball, lacrosse, softball and many other programs in our community.

The experiences of Mr. Bell as he rambled from violence and murder in sports to problems with sports in Cohasset are not reflective of the programs we have and the thousands of volunteer hours committed now and in the past. I found his statements to be inaccurate and not relative to the overall experiences of our children in our community. The "facts" he presented as "research" have unfortunately been slanted based upon his own personal past participation in team sports. I cannot allow his misrepresentations to stand without a rebuttal.

The volunteers and coaches are a cross-section of some of the finest residents of Cohasset. What they give in time to our children and programs cannot be measured. We are not perfect but we continue striving to offer our children quality programs.

The leaders of our community and school sports programs are challenged as our numbers have increased dramatically in the past few years while our resources have not. We work continually with the town administrators to provide the fields, space and equipment so that each child can participate and grow into his/her potential.

In closing, I believe that the sports programs in Cohasset offer many opportunities for our children and serve as a positive model to other communities in the state and country.

POLITICAL NOTES

Bradley met Kerry on air traffic

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, a member of the Legislative Air Traffic Caucus, met with United States Sen. John Kerry regarding the ongoing jet-noise problem in our district and the proposed new runway at Logan Airport.

During the meeting, Bradley stated his opposition to the expansion of Logan Airport saying, "It would triple the number of flights over Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. Presently, we have a flight overhead every 45 to 60 seconds; with the addition of a new runway it would be a plane every 15 to 20 seconds.

"In fact, building a new runway could even make delays worse. It would increase peak capacity of the airport resulting in an increase in airplane scheduled operations providing a worse delay."

Bradley said, "The only real solution is regionalization."

Kerry said he appreciated Bradley's willingness to share his concerns as well as those of his constituents on the issues surrounding Logan Airport's future. He also encouraged the representative to contact his office with any updates or suggestions as these issues move ahead.

Bradley can be reached in the State House Room 472, or called at (617) 722-2120, if you would like

Selectmen support spending 30K for runway study

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset selectmen gave the fight against a new Logan Airport runway a tailwind last week by supporting a Town Meeting article that would appropriate $30,000 for the South Shore Aviation Fund of the South Shore Jet Noise Council, the local group lobbying against the proposed fourth runway.

Town Meeting voters March 31 will have the final say on spending the money.. The proposed appropriation is one of 34 articles – or matters of business – on the Town Meeting warrant.

Eric Oddleifson, a member of the council and a Cohasset resident, said the amount of jet traffic over Cohasset, Hingham and Hull will increase from 29,000 flights to 98,000 flights annually. "That equals one a minute, seven days a week," he told the board.

Oddleifson was critical of MassPort studies that said the South Shore, which is in the direct path of the proposed runway 14/32, wasn't an "impact zone" or a zone where the sound level of the overhead air traffic reaches 65 decibels. Not only did he say the sound levels along Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue and especially in Hull, easily reach 65 decibels, but that the Federal Aviation Administration's 65 decibel level threshold is too high.

"Everything they said about the train was false, but we're still going to get the train. And we're still going to get that runway."
— Selectman Merle Brown

He also slammed environmental studies done by MassPort that dismissed any negative health impacts of a high-level of air traffic, saying the studies were "unsupportable and false."

Selectman Merle Brown likened the situation to the push to restore the Greenbush commuter rail line. "Everything they said about the train was false, but we're still going to get the train," he lamented. " And we're still going to get that runway."

Oddleifson said the money Cohasset gives, when combined with money committed by Hingham and Hull, could pay for independent noise and pollution studies. He said the South Shore Jet Noise Council is working with local environmental law firms to create a legal case against the runway.

A draft environmental impact report on the runway will be available for comment in March, and said the FAA could give final approval by July.

Brown suggested concentrating the lobbying efforts on forcing the planes further out to sea, before banking in for the final approach over Boston Harbor, something the board and Oddleifson agreed with.

Also, Oddleifson said he wants to force departing flights to climb to 10,000 feet, before banking west over the South Shore, rather than the 6,000 feet as proposed.

Questions and answers about Logan runway proposal

An interview with Eric Oddleifson, Board Member of the South Shore Jet Pollution Council about Air Traffic and Logan's Runway 14/32. The questions provided by Mr. Oddleifson reflect community concerns.

Q. We heard there will be a net environmental benefit to building the new runway at Logan. Isn't this true?

A. This is what Massport's director, Ginnie Buckingham is saying. She refers to the possible benefit to "close-in" neighborhoods like Winthrop, Chelsea and parts of Boston.

The new runway will bring an additional 100,000 jet arrivals and departures annually to Logan, increasing its capacity to handle traffic by 35 percent. 15,000 of these flights will overfly close-in neighborhoods. The vast majority—75,000—will overfly the South Shore.

So no matter how you cut it, there is no "net" benefit.

Ginnie refers to those 75,000 planes as flying "over water," referring only to Boston Harbor. In fact, they will be overflying our houses and businesses, on their way to and from Logan.

Q. What will be the increase in jet traffic from today's levels?

A.Jet arrivals alone—those loud long, low approaches we now experience, will almost quadruple—from 29,000 to 98,000 flights annually. It's gotten very noisy the last couple of years. This will be much worse—constant, persistent noise throughout the day and night.

Q. Is Massport trying to help us?

No. We lie outside their "impact zone," so they have no legal obligation to pay any attention to us.

Q. What's an "impact zone"?

A. It's an area, defined by a noise impact contour line, called the day–night sound level (DNL), drawn according to the 24-hour average noise level, expressed in decibels. A low level of impact is 45dB DNL, 55dB DNL is significant, and 65db DNL is severe. Massport uses 65dB as the point where they have to pay attention to people living inside this contour (the airport itself being the epicenter). They describe this threshold as a "significant" impact, rather than a "severe" impact as most others do, to hide the fact that noise at this level is extremely disruptive. Indeed, most people agree that residential land use is no longer possible at 65dB DNL.

The 65dB DNL contour, as now drawn, lies just short of the Hull peninsula.

Q. You mean that Massport can quadruple jet arrivals over the Hull High School, where noise has already reached intolerable levels, and not be forced to do something about it?

A. Yes. Essentially, Massport makes up the rules, then tells us we don't count because the rules don't apply to us. The use of 65dB by Massport limits its liability. We believe however its liability should start at 50 or 55dB, being the level of significant impact, depending on residential density. We believe as well that the 55dB contour extends over many parts of the South Shore. The difference between 55dB DNL and 65dB DNL is very significant—a factor of 10, as the scale is logarithmic.

Residents of Panama, Central America who live next door to a World Bank power development project involving heavy construction not unlike Boston's "Big Dig," experience much quieter surroundings than us. Their communities are protected by the World Health Organization's 55dB standard of noise exposure, unlike the citizens of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull who must withstand >65dB standard as developed by the FAA.

Q. How are these noise levels measured? And are the measurements accurate?

A. There is one noise monitoring station, at the tip of the Hull peninsula. We believe that the Integrated Noise Model (INM) used by Massport may actually be underreporting noise levels. We believe we are already experiencing a severe impact from aircraft noise, as that noise monitor routinely registers 70–80dB impacts from aircraft passing overhead.

These noise levels may be having quantifiable, cumulative psychological and learning impacts, including sleeplessness leading to increased anxiety, depression and distractibility, reduced effectiveness, chronic experiences of annoyance, and lowered reading rates in schools directly under flight paths.

Q. We hear that the runway will reduce delays. Since none of us like to wait 2–3 hours for airplanes, that sounds like a real benefit. Shouldn't we just grit our teeth and bear it?

A. It would be nice if delays could be reduced by runway 14/32. However, airport capacity experts, in public testimony, indicate that even with 14/32, there will never be a day when delays are fewer than they are now.

The reason is simple. If you build it, they will come—like highways. Air travel will increase another 25 percent in 10 years, and perhaps double from that level during the next ten. What we get with 14/32 is 35 percent more airplanes—not fewer delays. Even MassPort's own consultants admit that 14/32 would, in the best of circumstances, reduce delays 20 percent for only a couple of years. This isn't a delay reducing move by MassPort, but a capacity expanding move which will not help delays.

Q. What about jet emissions? Do they affect us?

A. Unfortunately, noise buildup may be the least of our problems. Aircraft emissions include benzene, a known carcinogen, and formaldehyde, a suspected carcinogen. Consultants at O'Hare concluded that cancer risks are five times higher than the regional average for those living near the airport.

A recent study of women living in Winthrop reveals a 50 percent higher than average incidence of breast cancer.

A government health census in Seattle found that infant mortality near the airport was 50 percent greater, heart disease 57 percent and cancer deaths 37 percent greater.

Residents in Cohasset have been noticing thin films of oil on their outdoor patio furniture recently. We hope it isn't building up in our water supply. The health risk, if flights over us quadruple, is not insignificant.

Q. How near an airport do you have to be to experience an impact from emissions?

A. The O'Hare study suggests within a 30-mile radius of an airport, especially downwind (which we are of course on the South Shore). Hull is 6 miles, Hingham 9 miles and Cohasset 12 miles.

Q. Is there any correlation, as in the Winthrop health study, between location/exposure in our towns to the arrival paths and cancer incidence?

This would be a good question for our towns' boards of health who perhaps keep records of who has cancer and where they live.

Q. What other bad news do you have?

A. The air traffic buildup the last couple of years is already having an impact on real estate transactions, and property values. A broker in Cohasset reports losing sales once prospective buyers hear the jets passing overhead. Another in Hingham has been sued by a client for having failed to reveal the noise he was exposed to. The noise is particularly severe in the early morning, and late at night. All flights between midnight and 6:00 a.m. are required, by the FAA, to fly over the South Shore, so as not to wake people to the west and north of Boston, as well as residents of Boston itself.

We estimate a decline in South Shore property values of $1.4 billion if 14/32 is built.

Q. How have you calculated that?

A. For every one percent increase in dB DNL, there is a corresponding drop in value of between 0.6–2.5 percent. Tripling aircraft traffic increases DNL by 5dB. We took an average decline in property value per dB DNL—1.5 percent, times the $18.4 billion in property value on the South Shore that will be affected.

Q. Given this impact, why on earth is the South Shore Chamber of Commerce supporting the runway?

A. We don't know. The general perception is that it's "good for business." More jobs, and the like. I think the Chamber is wrong. It will be very bad for business. Its members are uninformed about the true costs, to residents of the South Shore, of noise and air pollution.

Eric Oddleifson, board member of the South Shore Jet Pollution Council, is a Cohasset resident.

Ginnie Buckingham has managed to gain the support of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in her quest to get the runway built. Powerful business interests support its construction. Richard Egan, the CEO of EMC in Hopkinton, one of the country's most successful high tech entrepreneurs, has put together a coalition of 150 businesses to put political pressure on the Massachusetts legislature, and the U.S. Congress. Indeed, our Governor Paul Cellucci is openly boasting of his ability to get the runway built, because of his friendship with George W. Bush.

What we have here is an airport located in the heart of a city, very conveniently located for powerful businesses and professional groups that believe delays can be solved by building the runway.

Q. It sounds hopeless.

A. It may be. Congressman Moakley (who will not run for another term because of his health) and Mayor Menino, both of whom are adamantly opposed to the runway, may be the only people that stand between Massport and the destruction of the quality of life on the South Shore.

Our health and quality of life are clearly secondary to economic growth, in the minds of many. The South Shore is in danger of being destroyed in the name of "progress."

Ginnie Buckingham wonders why "activists" attempt to stand in the way of "sound public policy."

Some aviation consultants have concluded that a small minority must suffer to benefit the majority. The argument is if we want the benefits of easy access to low cost air travel, which have helped build America into an economic superpower, we must accept the degradation to our quality of life.

Essentially, we are being told to move away if we don't like it—that some people don't mind the noise, and impact on their health. Those that do can pick up and leave.

Q. Why are politicians not responding?

A. Bob Hedlund and Garrett Bradley are very responsive. Others may not fully appreciate the extent of the problem, which has been masked by the FAA and the airlines. We are trying to bring them up to speed with our briefing books, and papers written by independent experts. Our Congressional delegation appears to be sitting on the fence. Senator Kerry has decided to run for President, so he may not want to take a position. Finding an acceptable middle ground between citizens opposed to further runway expansion, not only in Boston but elsewhere, and the economic interests of the aviation transport industry and the country would be a perfect role for Senator Kennedy who has the political skills to pull it off.

Q. Is there nothing we can do?

A. We think that the impact of ever-increasing air traffic on the South Shore needs to be better understood, before 14/32 is built. There are also some changes to air traffic departure, and arrival, corridors that could be made.

The selectmen of Hingham, Cohasset and Hull have asked our political representatives for a moratorium on 14/32 until these issues are sorted out.

Since Massport doesn't have our interests at heart, residents will be asked in town meetings to allocate funds to retain consultants to assess the health and noise impacts, and to respond, during the 45-day public commentary period, to the soon-to-be-released 14/32 draft supplemental environmental impact statement.

Our citizens group—the South Shore Jet Pollution Council—has been formed to add input, and to coordinate this effort. We have already retained, with private funds, an aviation noise consultant, to develop a "white paper" on aviation noise, including metrics used and dB criteria levels, and to examine the accuracy and reliability of Massport's noise data. Further work needs to be done to measure existing noise levels, and project the extent of the noise impact if 14/32 is built.

The towns may decide to pursue the matter through the courts, if a dialogue with the FAA and Massport cannot be initiated, and the requests for a delay go unheeded.

In our opinion, it is unfair to ask private citizens, either individually or as taxpayers, to pay to address a problem they have not caused, and that should be covered in any environmental impact assessment. Indeed, the Director of the regional office of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has asked Massport to respond to our concerns, which it has not done (because we lie outside the 65dB DNL contour).

Other countries have adopted "the polluter pays" principle. Any monies we are forced to spend should be reimbursed by Massport, the FAA and the airlines.

Q. If Massport won't agree to true "over water" flight patterns, and noise and emission pollution levels increase as you forecast them, what then?

A. It is a difficult problem. Many of us on the South Shore are getting really hammered, particularly by the early morning and late evening flights, which the Logan tower keeps off other communities. At times it sounds like a World War II dogfight going on over our heads—at midnight! We are truly anguished. The thought of this traffic quadrupling is really more than we can stand.

I see it this way. What's going on is an illegal process of eminent domain, the taking of property by government to serve public purposes without compensation. There is no compensation because the airlines, and the FAA, take no responsibility for the noise impact that starts with "significant," i.e., 55dB DNL, and grows to "severe," i.e., 65dB DNL. Only when the noise impact is such that residential land use is no longer possible will they recognize the problem.

Unfortunately, for both them and us, there are already communities that lie in this zone that have been there for 300 plus years. We don't have the option of folding them up, like Hollywood sets and moving away.

Individual residents do have the option of moving away. My belief is they should be compensated for having to do so, if it is the will of government to exercise its powers of eminent domain.

Our problem is that some people who live in this impact zone are not affected, and others who live outside it want the increased flights that Logan expansion will bring, and are unsympathetic to our plight. Randi Currier expresses it well, in a recent letter to the Bedford Minuteman.

Additional flights at Hanscom result in costs to local residents: noise pollution (plane and auto), air pollution (plane and auto), visual pollution and traffic delays. These are external costs, not borne by the airlines, and thus not calculated into their economic decision-making. Such a case of negative externalities results in an inefficient allocation of resources, with the number of flights too high and too much pollution.

Further, the costs to residents increase exponentially as the pollution increases. A couple of planes per hour may pose negligible costs. But a threshold seems to have been reached where costs to residents are sharply escalating. We often can't maintain conversations due to noise and we're regularly awakened by flights.

This issue is larger than that of commercial flights at Hanscom and larger even than a New England issue. People nationwide are being paved over by the pressure to expand airports while each additional flight imposes an increasingly higher cost on residents. So, we are taking a stand at the margin, at the latest increase. This is a case of conflict of rights: the right of an airline to operate and people to travel versus the right to peace and quiet. Surely, the right to peace and quiet has at least equal merit. I want some recognition from my government, a.k.a. Massport, of this right. I want some recognition of the redistribution of costs and benefits they're promoting by advocating only for airlines and travelers and not for residents.

Pollution generation is a classic situation where government intervention is used to internalize the external costs. This is often achieved by setting pollution limits or by taxing pollution. Such measures introduce incentives to search for ways to yield less pollution into the market. For example, airlines might then invest more heavily in technology to reduce engine noise. Instead of requiring airlines to account for these costs, Massport subsidizes the airlines, e.g., via terminal improvements, further skewing the market towards pollution.

In the face of an outpouring of concern about the livability of areas surrounding Logan and Hanscom, Massport promotes travel: 'Fly New England!' The orthodoxy of 'economic growth' continues to hold sway while our actual welfare is eaten away by noise, traffic, and crowding.

My suggestion is that we establish the noise impact zone for the South Shore (and the rest of Boston as well) based on 55dB DNL, both now and projected, and begin to address the true external costs—not simply property devaluation, identified by Randi.

Unfortunately, this will not be done willingly by the airlines or the FAA, as the economic consequences may be considerable.

As Randi indicated, noise is only half the story. Jet emissions are carcinogenic. We may get more sympathy for our cause from a wider audience, as jet emission pollution is not contained within noise corridors, but spreads more widely. The statistics, as I mentioned, are startling. I compare this to the dumping of toxic waste by W. R. Grace in Woburn, which led to the pollution of the groundwater and eventually to leukemia in the neighborhood children.

The dumping that is going on here is analogous—but in the air, not the groundwater—and continuous, not in rusty 55-gallon drums behind the plant that eventually leak. Added to this is the occasional dumping of raw fuel on our heads as planes lighten up for landing.

The idea that Massport can, with impunity, quadruple the level of emissions output, without even bothering to pick up the phone and talk with us, I find troublesome.

At the moment, I see no option for South Shore towns and residents except civil action—a claim for wrongs, including the denial of our right to "quiet enjoyment" of our property by the Constitution. Massport won't talk to us—indeed, quite the reverse. Ginnie Buckingham's Coalition for Runway Expansion is very powerful—and appears to have the Bush administration behind it. The Congress, from what I can gather, is inclined to support the construction of Runway 14/32, and the 29 others around the country waiting for approval.

We may need another Jan Schlichtmann (the lawyer in the story/movie, A Civil Action) to help us.

What we have here is a regulated industry which has successfully fended off any regulation of its noise and emissions pollution by getting into bed with its regulators ("FAA—we are the FAA." a comment by a senior airline industry executive recently).

The general public—including the Congress—isn't sufficiently savvy to know what's going on. And the science itself is controlled by the polluters, as the bread and butter of acoustical engineering firms comes from the FAA and the airports!

Ginnie Buckingham, together with businessman Richard Egan, airline CEOs, and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, is waging a public relations campaign for the hearts, minds and votes of the U.S. Congress. Ginnie's background is in PR, not in aviation, so she is perfectly suited to put the proper "spin" on the message, i.e., "environmentally beneficial," "over water," "tiny little 5,000-foot runway," "no harm to anyone," it's about jobs," etc.

We are being outgunned, outspent and outmaneuvered. To push against this arsenal of talent, money and influence is an awesome task. It might be easier just to get out of town.

Vermont, anyone?

Q. Whom do we contact if we want to help?

A. We would suggest that you write commentary letters to the Mass. Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, Economic Impact Review Division, 100 Cambridge Street, Cambridge, MA, referring to the case number, when the draft supplementary environmental impact statement on 14/32 is released on March 13th. The division is charged with reviewing what is "significant," and what is not, and determining whether the document is "sufficient." The commentary period will run until April 30th. The FAA and Massport plan to publish their final report May 30th.

People can call the President of the Council, Tom Maloney, as well as Mary Ann Frye in Hingham, or Linda Wakeman and myself in Cohasset, for more information.

Writing our political representatives may help—Bob Hedlund, Congress Delahunt in the U.S. House and Senators Kerry and Kennedy.

However, Governor Cellucci and Ginnie Buckingham are acting as if it's a done deal. Our politicians, excepting Bob Hedlund and Garrett Bradley, have been mute on the subject.

We need local experts to join our Council's advisory board—to help with various cost assessments—on health, on real estate values—and to help politically. We would like to be seen as a group interested in dialogue, and in finding solutions. We are happy to talk at any time with Massport, Chamber of Commerce's and the like. Anyone who can help us do that is welcome.

Weymouth, and Sullivan last week, the state said it would be willing to consider eliminating the North Scituate station from its plans.

Cohasset selectmen approved a tersely worded letter to Sullivan, to be hand-delivered by state Rep. Garrett Bradley, telling him the board "adamantly opposes" the elimination of the station.

"We urge you to reject any proposal that would eliminate the North Scituate station," selectmen wrote, noting that the town would expect "additional and substantial mitigation measures to offset this negative impact."

While Callahan said he "can't blame Scituate for trying," he did criticize local officials for not considering the regional impact.

"No one is going to switch directions and drive south [to the Driftway station] to catch the train."

Cohasset selectmen said if the North Scituate station is eliminated, the current mitigation agreement the town and the MBTA are discussing would "go out the window." Bradley told selectmen Wednesday to prepare a second mitigation package in case the station is eliminated.

The board spent much of its meeting Tuesday night finalizing its mitigation requests, and seemed to focus on making sure the MBTA didn't shirk its responsibilities to abutters both before and after the trains start rolling.

Much like their counterparts in Cohasset, Scituate officials believed the MBTA didn't fully understand some of their concerns, and asked elected officials to set up last week's meeting with Sec. Sullivan.

Hynes said Sullivan understands those concerns now and is ready to negotiate with the town in good faith so long as the town is willing to do the same.

"The selectmen's view is that the North Scituate station is superfluous and would cause significant disruptive concerns to North Scituate Village and that patrons of that station could access the train in Cohasset or in Greenbush," Hynes said.

Sullivan appeared open to the request if it would open the path to smoother negotiations, Hynes said.

"We are receptive to eliminating the station if it has support and consensus at the local level," said Sullivan spokesman Jon Carlisle. Carlisle said the decision would of course impact other communities along the Greenbush corridor, especially Cohasset.

"We'd work with Cohasset too. We want to make sure as many people are as happy as possible," Carlisle said.

Hedlund said he knows by making Scituate happy, people in Cohasset will be upset, but that he will work to make sure the Cohasset is properly mitigated for the inconvenience. He also said Scituate selectmen will willing "in concept" to expand the Scituate Greenbush station to take part of the burden off the Cohasset station.

Bradley said the deal would be bad for Cohasset and will work to "a, make sure it doesn't happen, and b, if it does, that Cohasset's package is increased significantly."

As of press time, no meeting date between Cohasset and Sec. Sullivan had been set.

Count to be challenged and 10 signatures (two-tenths of 1 percent) is inconsequential."

Appearing before selectmen last week, Woods said, "We didn't used to have a lot of citizens' petitions, and now we do.

"Some are valid and some aren't, but they all have to be read at Town Meeting and go through them. I don't see any reason why it should be so easy [to place a citizens' petition on an annual Town Meeting warrant]."

She pointed out that technically, a person could bring a petition to just five houses, or even less if there's a big family, and easily get 10 signatures.

Woods' petition has 10 signatures from 10 different households.

But her article has already met with opposition. John McNabb presented selectmen with a fact sheet arguing against the proposed change. He called the proposal an "undemocratic" change to the way Town Meeting has been conducted in Massachusetts for 300 years. McNabb pointed out that nearly three times as many town-sponsored articles have failed in the past 10 years, than citizen articles.

"We didn't used to have a lot of citizens' petitions, and now we do."

— Lucia Woods, Jerusalem Road

Since 1990, 53 citizen articles have been debated before Town Meeting, and only 19 have passed — a 36 percent rate. Citizen articles have made up 11 percent of all articles debated. From 1990 to 1996, there were 23 citizen petitions. Since then, there have been 30.

The article also met up with some reservation on the part of the selectmen. Merle Brown said citizen petitions allow residents to "bypass the system" in getting something placed on the warrant.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris called Town Meeting the community's "main forum" of debate and was concerned the article would hurt that.

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said "Town Meeting is the last bastion of pure democracy and I would hate to see that hindered."

Selectmen deferred making a recommendation on the article, and said it would "let Town Meeting argue it out."

The amount of signatures required for a citizen's petition is set by state law. If the article was approved, it would then be sent as a home rule petition before the state legislature. Town Meeting is March 31.

Firefighters raise money for camera

Selectmen decided Tuesday night to withdraw a line item that would have given the Cohasset Fire Department $10,000 needed to purchase a new thermal imaging camera.

The withdrawal came at the request of call firefighters Joe Migliaccio and Bruce Pratt who told the board they had raised an additional $2,500 in the past two weeks. Including a $10,000 grant from the state towards the purchase of a camera, and $12,500 raised privately, Pratt said they were confident they could raise the remaining $7,500 needed to buy the unit.

Selectmen said if needed, they would bring back the issue back in an article at the special fall town meeting.

Pratt and Migliacco did bring a toy for selectmen to play with during the discussion – a cheaper, older version of the camera they hope to buy. All five selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad took turns scanning the crowd with the camera.

Pratt also said "This building isn't insulated too well. I could see a lot of heat escaping from the roof from outside."

Battle over separation of powers set aside for now

Conflicting articles to be pulled from Town Meeting warrant

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A potential high-noon showdown on the floor of Town Meeting between the town's independently elected boards was avoided, when selectmen agreed to remove an article that would have given the town manager controlling authority over any municipal capital project with a price tag of more than $100,000.

The article's removal is continent on the withdrawal of an opposing article, created by citizens petition, that would continue the sewer and water commissioners "independent authority" over any departmental projects.

The two contradictory articles, if kept on the annual Town Meeting warrant, would have resulted in a "shootout on Town Meeting floor," said water commissioner Glenn Pratt, one of the petition's signers, at last Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting.

The selectmen's article came on the heels of complaints that the town manager and board of selectmen were powerless to deal with any of the resident complaints about last year's sewer installation project. The project, was designed and run by the town's sewer commission, a board elected independently of the selectmen, as is the town's water commission.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen, Pratt and water commissioner John McNabb, another of the citizen petition's signers, that during the North and Central Cohasset sewer projects, "we would receive 20 calls a week from residents asking questions, or wanting information." Because he had no oversight or control of the project, the only thing he could do was refer a call to the sewer department — a response that would further upset the resident.

"To have these divided little fiefdoms is impeding the efficiency of the town."
— Selectmen Chairman Tom Callahan

The article had the support of selectmen Thomas Callahan, Merle Brown and Ronnie McMorris, but was fiercely opposed by Fred Koed, a former water commissioner. Mike Sullivan was not at the meeting.

Koed said all the town has to do is explain that under town bylaws, the water commission, sewer commission and board of selectmen are separate entities, and neither has control over the other. The school department is independent by state law, and has explicit control over any school construction projects.

"The only problem we have is that we can't explain the facts of life to people," Koed said. "It sounds like we can't say water projects are the responsibility of the water department."

McMorris countered, "Regardless of what we know about the independence of boards, [residents] consider it passing the buck."

Callahan echoed McMorris's comment. "When people call here [the selectmen's office], they want a solution and they want answers. They don't appreciate the political niceties of separate boards," he said. Callahan added that as town boards, they generally don't have the time needed to give a capital project the general oversight needed.

"To have these divided little fiefdoms is impeding the efficiency of the town," he said.

McNabb and Pratt pointed out that all capital projects undertaken by the water commission in recent years has been completed on budget, and usually under budget.

Pratt criticized the selectmen for not consulting any other board before placing the article on the warrant, and urged a sort of unilateral disarmament on both sides, in favor of getting together and working a compromise out. Koed, McMorris, and Brown each agreed.

"If we keep them, we're going to get up at Town Meeting and shoot each other in the face," said Brown, " and the people don't want to hear that."

Because the second article was a citizen's petition, McNabb and Pratt need to get the 10 signers to agree to the article's removal from the Town Meeting slate.

"We will pull ours, as soon as we get theirs," Callahan said.

"And our is conditional on yours being removed," McNabb joked.

Haddad ended the dispute by saying, "Give me both of them at the same time, and I'll hit delete for both."

Other topics Town Meeting agenda

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen heard an argument for a Water Commission-sponsored article that would allow water commissioners to serve on other town boards. Commissioner John McNabb said when the commission was created in 1946, it included language that prohibited the water commissioners form holding any other town office. McNabb contends this was only meant to apply to the commission at that time, and the language change was needed because he, along with Water Commissioner Glenn Pratt serve on other town boards.

McNabb is a member of the town Recycling Committee and Water Resources Protection Committee. Pratt is a member of the Cemetery Study Committee.

"Glenn can't leave that committee," Town Manager Mark Haddad joked. Pratt has been influential in the proposed expansion of the Woodside Cemetery.

Selectmen Chairman Tom Callahan balked at the article, arguing the selectmen are held to a similar restriction.

But Selectman Fred Koed, a former water commissioner, said, "In a town this small, sometimes you have to double-up."

Selectmen voted 3 to 1 in favor of the article – Callahan dissented – after Haddad jokingly asked third-term board member, and long-time town resident Brown, "How did you vote?" in 1946.

"I couldn't," Brown responded. "You had to be 21 and had to read something. I had to wait until I could read."

Other articles discussed included:

• the proposed article that would allow the town to purchase the "Wolf Pit" property off Beechwood Street. As previously reported in the Mariner, the town is eyeing a parcel of land near the Aaron Reservoir on which owner Wayne Sawchuk is proposing a senior housing development. However, the Water Commission is concerned the development's septic system would threaten the town's water supply. McNabb said he is still waiting for a cost appraisal of the property. Selectmen deferred a recommendation until Town Meeting.

• an article that would replace the town bylaw concerning hazardous materials. McNabb, who wrote the article in his capacity as a water commissioner, said the new language would replace the town's current "outdated" language, and bring the bylaw in compliance with Department of Environmental Protection regulations. He assured selectmen that when rewriting the bylaw, there were no "McNabb flourishes" added to the regulations. Board of Health Chairman Stephen Bobo said his board basically supports the article, but with a few changes that would clarify some of the language. Callahan, a former Conservation Commission chairman, also insisted that the bylaw reaffirm that the commission would retain jurisdiction where appropriate. Selectmen deferred a recommendation until Town Meeting.

• an article that would amend the "water resource" bylaw. Like the previous article, the changes would update the town's current bylaw to meet new DEP regulations, and expand the water resource-zoned district in Cohasset. Board of Health member Peggy Chapman suggested changing a sentence from "allowed uses" in the water resource district to "suggested uses" in order to prevent the restriction of uses to what is contained in the bylaw. Selectmen deferred a recommendation until Town Meeting.

Town Meeting is March 31 starting at 10 a.m. in the middle/high school gymnasium.

The Summer Institute is a series of courses that use the outdoor environment as the primary classroom. Summer Institute courses are built upon the premise that students learn best when actively engaged in learning activities. Students enrolled in Summer Institute courses receive credit equal to course credit earned during the traditional school year and are, therefore, expected to successfully complete comparable academic work.

Maritime Studies and the Schooner Ernestina

Grades 7 - 12 , Aug 13- Aug 21, 1.25 credits, course fee: $500 per person; less if 20 sign up.

(Schooner portion of the class is open to adults.)

The class is designed to prepare students as "able-bodied mariners," oceanographers, and historians as they take their place as crew aboard the historic schooner Ernestina. A three-day sail aboard the vessel is the culmination of a week of intensive training and study in and around local waters. After training in Cohasset's historic lifeboats, students will participate in all aspects of sailing the Ernestina. No longer green hands, students will crew this historic vessel and immerse themselves in scientific, mathematical and technological concepts during the operation of the vessel. The expedition will depart from and return to the Ernestina's homeport of New Bedford, giving the class an excellent opportunity to learn about New Bedford's maritime history.

Village effort gains momentum

"decorative street lighting" which appeared on the survey.

"People don't want it to be ornate or fancy," he said. Despite just a 10 percent response rate, Rizzo said the results show "a consensus that things need to be done in the village."

The survey also showed:

- 84 percent want to see the utility lines buried under ground in the village (100 percent along Elm Street):
- 93 percent want to change Elm Street to create a link between the harbor and village:
- 88 percent want Elm trees planted along Elm Street:
- 95 percent support new sidewalks and lighting along Elm Street:
- 71 percent want to see the intersection outside of the South Shore Art Center redesigned.

Changes that weren't popular were the creation of a one-way traffic flow at the Elm, Brook and South Main Street intersection, and different paving patterns at intersections to signify a gateway to an area of town.

A recent fund-raiser thrown by the CRC attracted 40 people, as part of Roy's goal of raising the $600,000 needed to see the project through

One of the things Rizzo has noticed is many, who initially rejected the CRC, have now come around, and are giving "constructive comments about the village and harbor initiative." He said a lot of residents' fears were alleviated just by better clarifying what the CRC's goals were.

Elm Street resident Dave Fulton was one of those early skeptics that now welcomes the discussion.

"At first I was a little bit skeptical because of the backers, but what I've seen I've been real impressed with," he said. Fulton sees the group as the "catalyst" in the public brainstorming sessions that have been held to discuss plans. The CRC, along with its design firm The Cecil Group, have held a number of open meetings, that have ranged from high-tech, such as computer slide shows and computer-altered images, to the low-tech pieces of paper and pencils participants use to write down their thoughts.

Fulton said he supports any effort to slow down traffic driving along Elm Street and through the village.

"We have a natural resource here we need to treat with respect," he said. "Just like at a business meeting, let's get it out on the table and discuss it."

Roger Whitley is one of those in favor of limited improvements to the village. "I'm not for a lot of decorative stuff. I think the simpler the better," he said. "But things could be spruced up."

Whitley urged people to participate in the public workshops the CRC sponsors. "They are begging for the input of the townspeople. I don't feel their trying to railroad anything through, it's just a chance for the town to do some planning," he argued. "And if you don't like what they are suggesting, they want you to tell them so."

He supports some aesthetic improvements to Brook Street, and thinks the CRC needs to approach any design with pedestrians in mind. "[Elm Street and North Main Street] are very wide and could be narrowed up by a sidewalk, which would slow traffic down," said Whitley.

Giroux said her support also stems largely from pedestrian safety in the village. A mother of five, she said in many places in the village, the sidewalk just ends.

"When I'm in the center of Cohasset walking towards the common, the sidewalk ends and I have to walk inside a white line, which is technically called 'the street,'" she said.

Giroux, who initially had reservations about the corporation, welcomes the change in tune regarding CRC.

"Instead of fighting about whether to do this or not, now we're debating about what type of bricks we're going to have in the sidewalk," she said..

Any design plan the CRC decides on that requires town money, or a town-sponsored grant, must be approved by a Town Meeting vote. Then the plan would be subject to approval of the various town boards, such as planning and conservation.

Rizzo said another public meeting is scheduled for sometime in the beginning of March.

Dan Littauer. The Cohasset High wrestler finished fifth the Div. 3 state championships last weekend, missing out on qualifying for the All-States by one spot. The junior captain finished his season at 145 pounds with a 23-3 record , which included a second place finish at the state's South Sectional tourney, and first place crowns in both the Cohasset Tournament and Whitman-Hanson Tourney.

Skippers sink Warriors

By David Ingber
CORRESPODENT

With the preliminary round over, only 16 teams remain. And the Cohasset team is one of them thanks to their thrilling 64-62 win over Foxboro on Tuesday.

"I am just really proud of our kids," effused Cohasset Coach Ron Ford following the victory over the 22nd seeded Warriors.

The host Skippers were down 32-31 at halftime, the deficit shaved to one courtesy of a half court Hail Mary from freshman center Sean Connolly at the buzzer, good for his first three-pointer of the season.

Foxboro came out of the locker room to put the first five points of the second half on the board, and managed to maintain at least a one hoop cushion for a good portion of the second half.

Every time the Warriors started to sneak away, however, Cohasset seemed to respond with a big hoop to stay within shouting distance, the lead never going above six for the remainder of the half.

"They had an answer all night," noted Ford of his team's ability to stay with their fast and physical opponents.

Cohasset rallied to tie the game for the first time with 4:49 to play at 59-59.

Foxboro regained the advantage at 61-60 on a jumper by senior forward Tim Callahan.

Hockey team closes out building season with optimism

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Missing the tournament by a single game, the Cohasset hockey team put together a season they can be proud of, especially in their tough league.

"We almost met our goal," said 32nd year Cohasset head coach Dennis Walsh. "We were very close."

The Skippers finished out the year with a solid record of 8-10-2 overall, but stayed close in all but a few games.

"I was pleased with the way we skated," the coach appraised. "We were competitive in all of our games."

One of the main reasons the team was able to stay so close against much larger teams was the entire defensive unit. Junior Eric Libby, who played his first year for Cohasset after two years at Xaverian, had a great year in Walsh's eyes, especially considering he had never played on the blue line before.

"He got better as the season went on," said Walsh, noting the progress of his inexperienced defender.

On the same line as Libby, also in his first year playing defense for the Skippers, was freshman Mike Devine, who was instrumental all season in killing power plays and stopping offensive attacks.

"He was a very solid defender," reported Walsh, "very dependable."

Backstopping the callow defense between the pipes was another neophyte, junior Dan Kinchla, who'd never even played goalie at the high school level before this season. All things considered, the veteran coach stated that he was "very pleased" with his play.

"He did a great job," said Walsh. "It is a hard position to learn, and a very hard position to play."

The Skippers did have some experience on the other defensive line, with senior captain Dan Morse. Morse, in his fourth year with the varsity squad, was a rock all season on the blue line, particularly during the gallant final playoff push.

"Dan Morse was our experienced defenseman," said Walsh. "He did a great job. He led by example."

Cohasset's other senior defenseman, Jay Rasmussen, was more of a two-way threat an offensive threat. He too picked it up when needed down the stretch.

"Toward the end of the season, he played pretty well," said Walsh. "He gave us some experience."

The Skippers had some ups and some downs on the ice this year.

One of the highlights, though, would have to be Cohasset's sweep over much bigger South Shore League rival Rockland. Cohasset beat them 8-3 in the first go round and then managed to pull off another win when both teams were batltign for a post-seaso nberth down the stretch.

Another league rival the Skippers managed to knock off twice this season was Norwell, which qualified for the tourney. Indeed, Cohasset's 5-0 dismantling of the Clippers in the second half of the season showed what this team could do when firing on all cylinders.

"Norwell might have made the states, but I wouldn't want to go in the way they are," said Walsh.

This contest featured a hat trick from the Skipper's skillful sophomore scoring sensation Greg O'Connell, as well as two goals from equally notable sophomore Matt Davis. These two led Cohasset all year in scoring, and should down the road as well.

In fact, the prospects for the team on the whole look pretty bright, as the inexperienced freshmen and sophomores of today will be the seasoned vets down the road.

"If everyone comes back, this team should be good," said Walsh, who is currently debating whether or not he should man the Skippers again next year. "They have three lines that can play hockey."

Walsh even offered some advice about the off-season for the players he may or may not coach next season: "Start thinking of next season: weight training, condition and outside hockey."

Cohasset junior Dan Kinchla provided the Skippers with strong play in the net this season, remarkable considering he'd never even played high school hockey before this season.

Do we really have a right to slam NASCAR?

MIKE SPELLMAN

Let me just start out by saying that I simply don't get car racing…formula, NASCAR, whatever. Nor do I consider it a sport. In my mind, it doesn't require remarkable skill to drive a car fast; it takes conditioning and decent reflexes.

The thrill of driving my car faster than necessary wore off, as near as I can recall, well before my 20th birthday, superceded by the risk of tickets, increased insurance premiums and, most of all, tragedy. Ditto for my being impressed by others who did so. And, since I've had children, this disfavor has gradually evolved into antipathy.

Needless to say, the thought of plopping down any of my hard earned bucks to support a sport that glorifies excessive automotive speed, or to even spend one minute watching it on TV, is anathema to me.

When the Dale Earnhardt tragedy occurred last weekend, my first thought was to express these thoughts in an editorial calling for an end to auto racing (spitting into the wind…I know). What stopped me from following through on this pointless assertion was the response of a "gear head" in my acquaintance. "Well then you'd just have to do away with hockey and football too," he said.

I scoffed at first, pointing to the Sheerin carries pride of two towns

Cohasset gymnast will have the support of Norwell teammates at states

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

The Norwell-Cohasset gymnastic team will be sending one gymnast to the state championship tournament on March 10, but she will have plenty of company.

Kristin Sheerin, of Cohasset, will be competing in the all-around at the Lincoln-Sudbury event and it's only fitting she will have her teammates all around her.

"The entire team is going down for support and to cheer her on to victory," said coach Kara Connerty, "all 13 of them."

This will be Kristin's second trip to the state championship event. Last year, as a sophomore, she finished sixth in the event.

This year, Kristin will carry a 35.4 average into the tournament. A 40 average is perfect.

This year she has already won the Pilgrim Conference II league all-around championship.

To go along with that, she has broken all the school records: vault, bars, beam and all around. According to coach Connerty, the beam is Kristin's strong event.

A total of 20 girls will be competing in the all-around, 10 from the south and 10 from the north. The selection from each section is made on a percentage basis and Kristin was a third seed.

"Kristin will have plenty of good competition at the meet," said Kara.

"There are a lot of very good gymnasts from the northern section. All 20 girls have to be very good. They have to qualify for each event, which in itself is quite an achievement.

"Kara's sixth place finish in the tournament last year was quite an achievement. Obviously, she feels she can do better, and she will certainly have plenty of support there to cheer her on."

According to the coach, the upcoming tournament is the big one. After the state tournament, there are no more gymnastic tournaments, such as track which goes on to the All-State and then the New Englands.

Jacobucci takes first in 100 meter race

But has to 'settle' for being the state's third fastest 50-meter swimmer

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The discouragement in her voice following Sunday's state championships was unmistakable. Alas, Garet Jacobucci had to settle for just one state crown.

The Scituate High senior took first overall in the 100-meter freestyle at Sunday's statewide meet at Northeastern University, along with a third in the 50-meter. As incomprehensible as it might seem, she was far from thrilled with her performance.

"I just didn't swim my best times, so I'm a little disappointed from that perspective," said Jacobucci, who will swim next year for the Emory University team, widely considered one of the nation's premier collegiate programs.. "I'm happy with the gold and the bronze medals, though, because I swam against good competition."

In the 50, Garet was chasing Weston's Caroline Curtis and Lincoln-Sudbury's Jenna Shoemaker right off the block, which was all the edge these two seasoned swimmers needed. Curtis touched the wall first at 25.29 seconds; Shoemaker second at 25.39, followed by Jacobucci at 25.47, creating a margin of just 18/100ths of a second between first and third place.

What irked Garet perhaps even more than the third place finish was the fact that she expected to get much closer to her top time for the season (24.91) against this elite competition.

"I've generally performed better against the better swimmers," said Garet, twhose best time came in a second-place finish to a top Duxbury male swimmer. "But it just didn't happen today."

Garet also finished well off her season-best 53.69 in the 100, but her time of 54.83 was still good enough to edge Curtis at the wire by a mere .06 seconds. The Weston swimmer again took an early lead in this race, but Garet was able to close the gap over the last 25 yards or so to reach the wall a blink faster.

Fortunately, star Scituate swimmer Garet Jacobucci doesn't really have her head in the clouds.

"I really thought (Curtis) had it," confided Jacobucci, who swam in the lane adjacent to the Weston swimmer. "I think I was just a little stronger down the stretch, and that made the difference."

Despite being stronger down the stretch, Garet did not feel she was in her best shape entering the meet. Between swimming for the Scituate/Cohasset high school team and getting ready for the U.S. Sectional Swim Meet in two weeks with her club team the Gators, who train out of Bentley College in Waltham, she does not feel she had the time to properly "taper off" her training for these events.

"It's been a little crazy, but the other girls who swam Sunday might have the same kinds of problems," she said.

Even though a better regimen might have meant the difference between winning and finishing third in the 50, Jacobucci made it clear that in no way does she regret swimming for the first-year Scituate/Cohasset squad under head coach Jamie Kearney.

Swimming for the school team has enabled her to log several more official times than she could have otherwise — an important achievement because minimum times must be set in order to qualify for the Sectionals, which are being held March 8-11 in Long Island, New York. She's already qualified for the 50- and 100-meter races, and hopes to qualify for the 100-meter breaststroke in the next two weeks, perhaps at the Age Group Championships this weekend at Wheaton College.

Even beyond that, though, it sounds as if being a part of this school swim team is not something Jacobucci would have wanted to miss for all the top times in the world.

"I've had a blast swimming with these guys this year," she said. "Sometimes the people I swim with can take this too seriously, but getting to swim with this team and all the kids who just liked being there for the fun of it was great."

fact that there have now in the last year been four accidental deaths on the professional NASCAR circuit, allegedly the safest of them all, whereas there had been no game related deaths in hockey and football on the professional level for as far back as I can recall.

Given time to reflect, however, several recent hockey tragedies came to mind: the severing of goalie Clint Malarchuk's jugular in an NHL game, ex-Bruin Trent McLeary nearly suffocating when his windpipe was crushed by a slapshot, the paralysis of local collegiate players John Gilpatrick (of Hanover) and Travis Roy (of B.C and Maine), the death of a local high school player a few years back after a check sent his heart into spasm.

Talk about anathema, the thought of doing away with hockey or even dramatically altering the way it's played because of these incidents is inconceivable to me.

As painful as it is to admit, in the final analysis, I must concede that there is enough of a parallel between some of the sports I love and auto racing to force me to modify my initial shoot-from-the-hip impulse.

The bottom line is that many of the sports we all enjoy do come with associated risks. As fans, it is up to us to lobby for the adoption of safer measures. Nascar fans are following this path, crying now for softer walls and better safety restraints in the vehicles.

Given that, I personally don't think it's fair to say much more about the sport than I already have.

This is when Cohasset's veteran leadership stepped up, just as Coach Ford predicted would be the case if the game was close. Senior captain TJ Bilodeau got it started, sticking a trey from a few feet behind the arc to ignite the enormous home crowd and, more importantly, gave Cohasset its first lead of the half with 3:02 left in regulation.

Bilodeau was not even expected to play until yesterday due to an ankle injury he suffered last week. But the senior showed what it meant to play in the tournament, dumping in 15 points to go along with three rebounds with three boards. He also proved what a clutch performer he was by draining all four of his free throws.

After this huge three pointer, Cohasset proceeded to hold Foxboro to a single free throw the rest of the way, eating the clock on every possession.

"Defensively, our kids really dug in at the end," lauded Ford.

Junior point guard Matt Bilodeau (TJ's brother) was instrumental in keeping the tempo of the game to Cohasset's liking, meticulously running the offense and surrendering few turnovers.

Ford predicted this would be the case last Sunday, saying, "If we dictate the pace, we will do all right."

The younger Bilodeau finished with 16 points on 6-of-7 shooting from the floor, along with a dazzling "and-1" play that brought the Skippers to within one late in the game.

The 11th seeded Skippers (14-7) now hope that the third time will be the charm against South Shore League rival Abington. The sixth seeded Green Wave (17-5) beat Cohasset in both regular season meetings, and will now host them for a third go round on Saturday (7 p.m. tip).

The winner in this game will go on to face the victor of Wednesday's match-up between 14th seeded Martha's Vineyard and number three seed Rockland in the quarterfinals (time and place to be announced).

SPORTS NOTES

21st annual Snow Row

The Hull Lifesaving Museum presents its 21st annual Snow Row, Saturday, March 3, at the Windmill Point Boathouse, Hull Gut. The race will start at 12:30 p.m. (coxswain's meeting 11:45 a.m.) The fees for rowers are $15 members, $20 non-members, spectators free.

Crowds will gather on the beach beside the museum's Windmill Point Boathouse to experience the wild start, unpredictable weather, and assembled mob of boats and athletes. The museum's signature race, the Snow Row covers a 33/4-mile triangular course starting off the beach at Windmill Point, LeMans style, and continuing around Sheep Island, past the Peddocks Island day marker and back to shore. The event is entirely within view of the boathouse. It is a rare opportunity to see, up close, the array of wooden pulling boats on the beach and in action — peapods, dories, wherries, whitehalls, ocean shells, kayaks, pilot gigs, captain's gigs and Irish curraghs.

The race has five boat categories: workboats, livery boats, coxed boats, ocean kayaks and ocean shells. A few notes to all race participants: 1. all racers must be members of the HLMI Rowing Association; 2. all boats must carry PFDs, bailers and whistles; 3. all coxed boats must begin the race bow on the beach; and 4. the HLMI Race Committee reserves the right to cancel the race or keep individual boats from setting forth due to weather conditions or rower skill level.

After watching the excitement of the Snow Row's one-of-a-kind start, warm up inside the boathouse with a cup of hot coffee or cocoa. A mile from the boathouse, the museum will be open throughout the day with free admission, and on display, the new small craft exhibit. For more information about the Snow Row call Ed McCabe at the museum, (781) 925-5433.

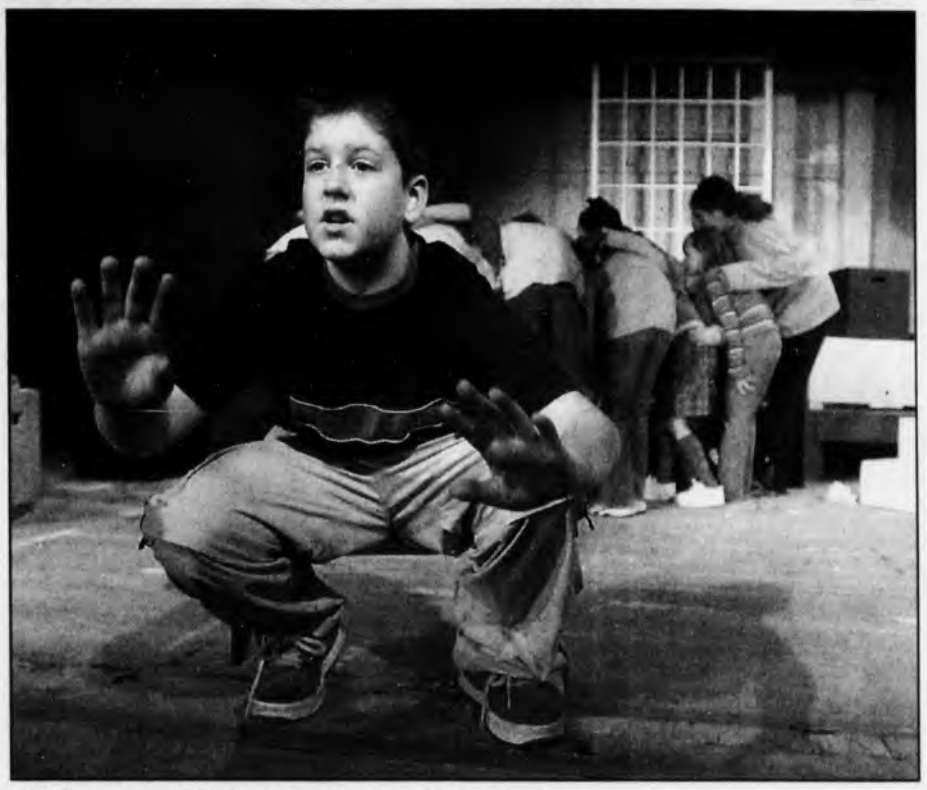
country. This is the first all-child production the club has tackled in about five years. Di Giacomandrea says one of the club members heard about the show through a theater news group on the Internet. The club got a copy of the script and loved it.



The opening number about hating turnips and how not to let vegetables defeat you — including the age-old trick of depositing a vegetable in your dinner napkin — gets the show off to a perfectly hilarious start, Di Giacomandrea says.

There will be nine shows on weekends from March 2-17. Evening performances are at 7:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday, with matinees Sunday at 2 p.m. Immediately following the Sunday, March 4 performance, there is an "after-glow" reception for the cast, family members and friends.

There is no performance on Sunday, March 18 because the club has a float in Scituate's St. Patrick's Day Parade, in which members will be promoting their next show, "Bye, Bye Birdie."

"The kids are wonderful," Di Giacomandrea says. "Watching them rehearse is a refreshing and welcome break from any hectic day. You can't help but smile and laugh, they are all so precious."

The cast features Katy Baker, Ryan Connors, Rebecca Dickenson, Josh and Jessica Dupre, Polly and Wis Murray, Adam Yeager, and Clair McCarthy, all of Cohasset; Corie Bulman, Genevieve and Rick Chason, Leah Curran, Emma Freeman, Geoff Gordon, Alex Huntington, James Nolan, Nick and Marina Pedini, Declan Powers and Ian Wilder of Scituate; Catherine Wilson and Marissa Yourell of Marshfield; and Jessica Widdicome of Quincy.

Tickets for "How to Eat Like a Child and Other Lessons on How Not to be a Grownup" are $10 and can be purchased at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Front Street Books in Scituate, at the door or by phone at 383-1718. Girl Scout troops will receive $2 off each ticket purchased for opening weekend. Call Dawn Rota at 545-3195 to reserve seats.

Fine dining is just around the corner

Restaurateurs toast area as culinary hot spot

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

You don't have to drive to Boston for a night of elegant dining. Fine cuisine is rapidly becoming a staple of the South Shore, according to a number of local chefs and restaurant owners alike.

"Ten years ago, there weren't many restaurants to choose from around here," said Joe Campbell, director of operations for Atlantica, a fine-dining establishment in Cohasset. "But now, it's a wide open market. In the last four years, people have been really raising the bar in terms of food. It's still not Boston, but it's improving."

Campbell said one of the reasons he thinks the food scene on the South Shore is improving is because people's palates are becoming more sophisticated—and in turn, so are the culinary creations of given chefs.

The options are endless—try a chilled split lobster served with garlic cream sauce and tomato remoulade from Atlantica. At Riva, a new Scituate Harbor restaurant, diners can enjoy a grilled Red Oak Farm New York Sirloin basted with roasted garlic and red-wine butter. Like Italian? You can enjoy an authentic Neapolitan meal at Trattoria San Pietro in Norwell, or head over to Pembroke to sample the "eclectic" menu at Boca.

"I think the South Shore food scene is definitely up and coming," said Atlantica chef Erik Stenfors. "People seem to be getting back to the roots of New England-style cooking with things like lobster, and a lot of other sea foods. Striped bass is making a huge comeback."

Living in restaurants

"Seafood is big again because people are thinking of the health factors that come with it," Campbell added. "Plus, seafood handling is a lot better these days. Around here, you know you're going to get a fresh piece of fish."

Stenfors said another up and coming culinary trend seems to be the use of exotic types of mushrooms like black trumpets and shittakes.

"To me, the in-thing around the South Shore seems to be Italian restaurants," said Mike Burke, the chef and co-owner of Riva. "People just seem to be leaning that way."

Burke described Riva's menu as "authentic Italian cooking."

Burke said one of his favorite ingredients these days are called Sunchokes, which look like ginger roots, but do not taste like them. He added he's also been cooking with foods like dried fruits in the form of sun-dried cherries and sun-dried cranberries.

Like Stenfors and Campbell, Burke agrees the South Shore is becoming a dining draw for local residents and even out-of-towners.

"People are attracted to this area because it's right on the ocean, and it's out of the city," Burke said. "A lot of the restaurants here get the fish right from the fishermen. But people just want good quality food, and we're starting to see more and more of that around (the South Shore). People who live here know good quality when they see it. If you give people good quality meals, good portions, and good service, I don't think you can go wrong."

"I think people who dine out on the South Shore are looking for a very straightforward approach nowadays," said Mike's brother Derek Burke, who also works at Riva. "People want consistency—they want to know what they're going to get."

Riva chef/co-owner Mike Burke says Italian restaurants and those offering fresh seafood are big on the South Shore.

And the quality of what they're getting locally is a big reason folks are dining locally, said Boca owner Carol Zaremba.

"I think people on the South Shore are more into food than they ever were before," said Zaremba, "I still love going into Boston to eat once in a while, but I do think the South Shore is getting there in terms of having good restaurants in the area."

Zaremba said like others in the business, she is seeing a trend of people eating more seafood. However, she said at her establishment, pasta and various meat-dishes are still frequently requested.

"We go through fish like you wouldn't believe," Zaremba added.

Vincenzo Nocero, owner of Trattoria San Pietro, said his restaurant offers traditional, central-Italian cooking. Like other chefs and restaurant owners, Nocero believes people want certain things from their given dining experiences.

"It takes consistency to be successful here," Nocero said. "You can't make a good steak today and then make a bad steak tomorrow. You can't fool the people. They're well-educated when it comes to food. To survive here is tough, so you have to do the right things."

One of the things Nocero features at his restaurant is the fact that he gets all of his wines and his pasta imported directly from Italy.

"There are some good quality restaurants around here," Zaremba said, "and the future certainly looks very promising. A lot of people still go to Boston when they want dinner, but what people forget is that there are also a lot of people coming from Boston to eat on the South Shore."

"Ten years ago, there weren't many restaurants to choose from around here. In the last four years, people have been really raising the bar in terms of food."
Joe Campbell,
Atlantica operations director

"It's becoming a challenging market," Stenfors said. "The biggest thing chefs are going to have to do is change with the times. Chefs and restaurant owners need to listen to the public—and if people are not coming in, you have to ask yourself why."

"My opinion is the scene's going to boom within a couple of years," Mike Burke said. "It's bound to be a very successful area."

"It's only going to get better," Campbell said. "There's been a market down here that's been neglected for a while, but now it's starting to get hot. The restaurants that pay attention to details and listen to the public will prosper, and the ones who can't deliver will get shaken out."

Marshfield wrestler helps pin down youth program

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

This continues our on-going campaign to recognize local teens who give back to their communities. Watch for a new Spirit of Community feature each month in Living. We welcome your nominations. Please see our ballot inside.

Barry Wilson is serious about wrestling, but his dedication to the sport does not get in the way of his giving back to his community.

Wilson, 18, of Marshfield, just won his third consecutive state championship in his division. He has been wrestling since the fourth grade, and has been an active member of the Marshfield High School team for the past four years.

Spirit of Community

When he's not on the mat, Wilson is an active member of his church — St. Thecla's in Pembroke — and is always striving to be active with the youth population in his town.

In January, Wilson and Marshfield gym-owner Roger Whidden founded a new youth wrestling program a venture that inspired Whidden to nominate Wilson for the Spirit of Community award.

"Barry is not just an athlete," Whidden said, "he's just a very well-rounded person. His overall demeanor is excellent, and he's a great role model for young kids."

Wilson comes from along line of wrestlers—four of his uncles on his mother's side took part in the sport. So did his father. Wilson started wrestling when he was young, but that was only because he was willing to commute to a wrestling class in Wellesley.

"That really helped me develop some skills," Wilson said. "Starting earlier was definitely a good idea." And Wilson has three state championships under his belt to prove it.

But for local kids getting into the sport early isn't easy, because there is no youth program in the area. Eighth grade is the earliest wrestling is offered at most South Shore schools.

When Wilson found out Whidden, owner of Whidden's School of Fitness in Marshfield, was trying to start up a youth wrestling program this winter, he jumped at the chance to get involved.

"I started realizing that there really weren't any wrestling programs for kids in grade one and up," Whidden said. "But I knew I couldn't start up a youth program on my own." Whidden said he called Marshfield High wrestling coach John Kenney and told him he could use some help.

"Immediately, (Wilson) came down," Whidden said. "He said he would be willing to give up his Saturdays to do this. He grabbed about eight other friends of his and he ran the youth program in the (wrestling) pre-season. All the kids had a lot of respect for him."

"I plan on doing it again," Wilson said of the youth program. "Not only does it help the kids, but it also helps me brush up my skills. But all in all, you're there for the kids. I had a lot of people helping me when I was young, so for me, this is a giving back kind of thing."

Wilson said he believes wrestling gives younger kids some basic lessons in life.

"Wrestling encourages a base of morals," Wilson said. "It teaches about discipline, conditioning, and taking care of yourself. There are also rules in wrestling. It's an organized fight, so it teaches kids to respect those rules. You also learn a lot about controlling yourself and your own actions when you're on the mat. I've also gained quite a few friendships with the kids. It's cool just to be there for them, and it's even cooler to see them experience success."

Whidden gives Wilson a lot of the credit for making the youth program a success.

"(Wilson) was really the guy that went for it and made it happen. Now, when the younger kids see him, they just surround him. When I took some of those kids to see (Wilson) in his matches, they would all be like 'Hey, there's Barry!'"

After graduating from high school this year, Wilson said he plans to stay involved with youth wrestling as much as possible.

"I'm extremely proud of him being recognized," said Barry's mother, Mary. "It's great he's promoting his sport and sharing his knowledge with the younger generation."

He's a good role model, he's involved with his church, he has a terrific sport, and he has a good amount of school spirit," said Barry's father, Gerry. "There's no telling how much he will achieve in his life."

"He's totally committed to whatever he's doing," said Marshfield High School principal Peter Deftos. "I have nothing but great things to say about him."

"Nobody works harder or longer at improving himself," said assistant wrestling coach John Putnam, who has been with the program for 29 years. "He is the most dedicated individual that we've ever had in the wrestling program."

Steak and pan sauce

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Most of us think of steaks and grilling as inseparable yet a quick (10-minute) skillet steak is one of life's great pleasures since it requires no preheated grill and can be done in the middle of a snowstorm. Although cooking the steak itself is not too difficult, the pan sauce is what transforms this dish from everyday steak to a Saturday night dinner, the perfect marriage of meat and sauce leading to a luxurious, extraordinary main course.

First, the steak itself. Much testing has led me to select either ribeye or boneless strip steaks since they have the most flavor and are quite juicy. (Ribeye steaks are also boneless; if they include the bone, they are called rib steaks.) One-inch thick steaks are the most common supermarket size and a heavy-duty preheated skillet is a must. The steak is seasoned liberally with salt and pepper, slapped in the hot greased pan, cooked for 5 minutes, turned, and then cooked another 5 minutes or so for a medium-rare steak. The meat is now removed from the pan and the sauce is made.

A classic French pan sauce has four main ingredients: shallot or onion, wine or stock, herbs, and butter to finish. Of course, there are easier, more pedestrian approaches such as a simple combination of Worcestershire sauce, water, and butter, but for a good ribeye and with only a few minutes of work, I wanted more complex flavors. I preferred shallot over onion for the improved flavor and after it had been softened, I tried a variety of liquids. Chicken stock was wan and incapable of standing up to the beef, red wine was good but a bit lackluster in terms of taste, Marsala was too sweet, but sherry was just right.

Next, I tried adding vinegar but it was a poor match with the sherry as were capers and green peppercorns. To add some bite to the sauce, I preferred a combination of mustard and lemon juice. For the herbs, I preferred thyme and parsley although you can experiment with what0s on hand. (Tarragon is one of my favorite herbs with steak.) To finish the sauce, I added some anchovy fillets at the beginning of cooking so that they would dissolve and add a bit great idea and adds a bit of luxury and smoothness. (Four tablespoons of cold butter are whisked into the sauce just before serving, one tablespoon at a time.)

STEAKS WITH SHERRY SHALLOT PAN SAUCE

This recipe serves two and both steaks can be prepared in the skillet at the same time. For four people, increase the pan size, increase the cooking times a bit (the meat will cook more slowly), but you can leave the ingredients for the sauce the same – there will be enough for all.

For the steaks
2 ribeye or boneless strip steaks, 1 inch thick, about 8 to 10 ounces each
Salt and freshly ground pepper
1 tablespoon vegetable oil

For the sauce
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
1/4 cup finely chopped shallot, about 1 large
1 1/4 cups dry sherry
4 anchovy fillets, coarsely chopped
1 teaspoon mustard
1 tablespoon thyme, finely chopped
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 tablespoon flat leaf parsley, finely chopped
4 tablespoons cold unsalted butter, cut into tablespoon-sized pieces
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

1. Season the steaks liberally with salt and pepper. Set a large heavy-duty skillet over high heat. When hot add the oil, swirl to coat the bottom of the pan, and then add the steaks and stand back - they will splatter. Cook for 5 minutes and turn. Cook on second side for 4 minutes for rare, 5 minutes for medium rare and 6 minutes for medium. (Check starting at 4 minutes. The steaks will continue to cook as they rest.) Remove steaks from skillet and keep warm in a low oven or tented with foil.

2. Pour off any fat from the skillet and lower to medium-high heat. Add the vegetable oil and then the shallot. Cook for 2 to 3 minutes or until it has softened but not browned. Add the sherry and anchovy. With a wooden spoon or heatproof spatula, scrape the brown bits from the bottom of the pan. Boil until the sherry is reduced by about half and syrupy about 5 minutes. Add the mustard and thyme and cook for an additional 2 minutes. Off heat add the lemon juice and parsley and whisk in the cold butter one tablespoon at a time. Season to taste with salt and pepper and serve over the steaks at once.

Selecting plants for a woodland garden

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Leaving our most recent snowfall behind, I gratefully escaped southward for a brief weekend visit to the beautiful state of Virginia where the magic of springtime was in the air. A profusion of pansies appeared around every corner, their smiling, multicolored faces cheerfully raised to greet the warm sunshine. Splashes of brilliant yellow daffodils dotted lawns and woodlands. Many of the trees and shrubs were beginning to unfurl tiny, tender green leaves, a dramatic contrast to the elegant backdrop of handsome hollies and magnificent, statuesque magnolias. Spring is coming our way.

As the wintry days of February slip away and March comes roaring in, we venture forth into our landscapes to begin the process of spring cleaning our lawns and gardens. Winter storms have scattered debris throughout our yards. As we clip, rake, and haul, thoughts turn to creating new borders, planting ornamental trees and shrubs, or renovating tired, overgrown plantings.

Shady, wooded properties often pose the greatest challenge for developing new gardens. Low light and competitive root systems limit the choices for suitable plants, particularly those which produce flowers. The key to success is to analyze your existing conditions and to modify your site to expand your growing opportunities. Observe and identify the plants which currently grow on your property. If necessary, take leaves and cuttings to your local nursery. The types of plants which presently thrive will tell you a great deal about your growing environment. Many of these may be desirable specimens which may only require a little pruning. Leaf litter and decaying logs are a source of organic matter and an ideal mulch and should be allowed to remain reasonably intact. Dense shade cast by closely growing evergreens or root competition from mature maples and beeches may prove insurmountable obstacles. Older trees which have lost their lower branches, creating an overhead canopy, beneath which understory plants have become established, present the ideal location for creating a woodland garden.

Take a stroll through Garden in the Woods in Framingham or a local woodland garden in springtime to observe Mother Nature's handiwork. Notice that many of the plants in wild places grow in clusters or colonies. A naturalistic garden should take its cues from nature but does not necessarily have to be composed of all native plants although these plantings usually reduce the need for maintenance. An informal layout with winding paths of wood chips, mulch or pine needles which includes both native and introduced plants, trees and shrubs can give rise to a peaceful, cool retreat throughout the growing season.

The list of plants which will adapt to a woodland garden is remarkably diverse. Small trees and shrubs which night be considered include dogwood (cornus florida, C. mas, C. kousa),redbud (cercis canadensis), witch hazel (hamamelis), hollies(nex), mountain laurel (kalmia), leucothoe, viburnum, Oregon holly (mahonia),azalea and rhododendron. For moist shade, try red and yellow twig dogwood, sweet pepper bush (clethra),blueberry (vaccinium), serviceberry (amelanchier) and winterberry (ilex verticillata).

The month of May tends to be peak bloom season in our local woodlands as many woodland flora bloom in spring, before the trees have fully leafed out, to take advantage of the sun's light and warmth. Lady slippers, trillium, trollius, Virginia bluebells, lungworts, Solomon's seal, primroses, hellebores and jack-in-the-pulpit are in their glory. Spring-flowering bulbs make attractive companions to these woodland wildflowers. The best for naturalizing under deciduous trees include scillas, snowdrops, daffodils, crocuses, chionodoxa, fritillarias, and grape hyacinths.

There are a numerous groundcovers, both deciduous and evergreen, suitable for naturalistic settings including lady's mantle (alchemilla), gingers (asarum), epimediums, foamflower (tiarella), golden star (chrysogonum), wintergreen (gaultheria), sweet woodruff (galium), phlox stolonifera, lamium, and leadwort (ceratostigma).

As the season progresses, foliage color and texture play expanding roles in the shady garden. The fiddleheads of aristocratic ferns gradually unfurl to reveal their lacy fronds as the spring progresses, adding textural contrast to the broad leaves of blue, gold, green and variegated hostas which are premier performers in all types of shady sites. astilbes, goatsbeard (aruncus),and bugbane (cimicifuga) offer feathery flowers and exquisite, divided leaves. Bleeding hearts (dicentra), corydalis and columbines (aquilegia) provide equally charming blossoms and foliage diversity. Drifts or mass-plantings of bulbs, ferns, hostas, astilbes and groundcovers intermingled with strategically placed shrubs and trees will give the best effect.

The importance of determining your particular site's light and soil conditions cannot be overemphasized. Prune branches to let in additional light, amend the existing soil with organic matter to promote drainage and improve water retention, select plants appropriate to the existing soil and light conditions and focus on foliage.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

FRIDAY, MARCH 2

A mixed bag of planetary influences makes for an interesting, dynamic day. A rough spot is in effect between 11:03 a.m.-2:03 p.m., when the moon opposes Mars. Slow down in this period; stop, look and listen. All communications get the green light; chat, network, collaborate. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 9:03 p.m. This month's full moon culminates in a week, March 9. This can be a fun evening. However, a lunar opposition to Pluto occurs in the early morning hours. Know when it's time to call it a night.

SATURDAY, MARCH 3

This day rates high across the board. Expect others to be sociable, talkative. The best planetary influences for new starts are in effect until 1:45 p.m., when the Gemini moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. The remainder of the day rates high for enjoying favorite sports, hobbies and friends. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

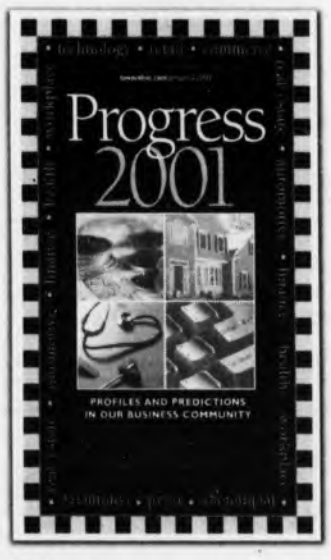
SUNDAY, MARCH 4

The moon enters the sign Cancer at 3:24 a.m. This day is ideal for spending quality time with family and close friends. Be more attentive and sensitive to the needs of others. Plan a special dinner, at home or your favorite restaurant. An applying 90-degree alignment of the sun and Pluto makes this a favorable time to mend bridges, heal old wounds, strengthen ties in existing relationships. Let go of the past; clear the decks and start anew.

MONDAY, MARCH 5

Yesterday's planetary influences are in effect today as well. Others may be moody, hypersensitive; choose your words carefully. Tackle jobs that need redoing, repair or renovation. The sun/Pluto alignment culminates at 1:11 p.m. It is okay to start new activities or make important decisions between 3:00-10:10 p.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn and becomes inactive. Plan a quiet evening; enjoy solitude, meditation, music.

TUESDAY, MARCH 6



The next few days may be topsy-turvy. Take your time. The moon enters Leo at 5:30 a.m., generating an upbeat mood. In addition, a lunar contact to Jupiter urges you to initiate new projects before 11:41 a.m. Slow down and pay extra attention to details between 3:58-6:58 p.m., when the moon opposes dreamy Neptune. This is an evening to kick back and enjoy favorite friends and pastimes.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7

A barrage of planetary alignments occurs in the next few days, making for an action-packed period. Take it slow and easy. Today the Leo moon forms challenging contacts to Mercury, Uranus and Saturn until 10:50 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Don't launch bold ventures or large-scale enterprises. Instead, plan to finish business already begun, review and redo. Stay upbeat and don't allow minor setbacks to throw you off track.

Hingham Symphony presents the Borromeo String Quartet

On Saturday, March 3, at 8 p.m., the Borromeo String Quartet will come to Hingham for a special performance as part of the Hingham Symphony Orchestra Chamber Music series.

Known as one of the most exciting ensembles of its generation, violinists Nicholas Kitchen and William Fedkenheuer, violist Mai Motobuchi and cellist Yeesun Kim will perform Beethoven's String Quartet Op. 18 No. 2 and a new quartet by Steven Mackey, "Ars Moriendi." The Borromeo's presentation of this new work received rave reviews at its performance in the Fleet Boston Celebrity Series this past weekend.

Globe critic Richard Dyer wrote that the Borromeo "combines every 20th century virtuoso ensemble virtue with an old-world sense of color, character and style. To hear them in their youthful prime is one of our great privileges."

The concert will take place in Sanborn Auditorium, an intimate venue with excellent acoustics at the new Hingham Town Hall, 220 Central St.

The newly formed Hingham Symphony String Quartet (Aya Hasegawa and Laurent Chatel, violins; Melissa Reardon, viola; and Razvan Suma, cello) will join the Borromeo to present the virtuosic Octet Op. 20 by Mendelssohn.

The concert will take place in Sanborn Auditorium, an intimate venue with excellent acoustics at the new Hingham Town Hall, 220 Central St. Tickets are available at the Hingham Public Library, at Noble's in Hingham Square, Cards & Shards in Cohasset, or by calling 781-740-5694.

The cost is $15 for adults, $10 for age 18 and under. The audience is invited to meet the musicians at a reception following the concert.

Hingham Symphony Orchestra presents the Borromeo String Quartet, in a chamber music performance of Beethoven's String Quartet Op. 18 No. 2, and the new quartet by Steven Mackey, "Ars Moriendi." The HSO String Quartet will join them for Mendelssohn's Octet Op. 20 on Saturday, March 3, at 8 p.m. at the Sandborn Auditorium at Hingham Town Hall.

Cost is $15 for Friday 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. $80 for Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., or $90 for both sessions.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

COUNTER INTELLIGENCE

There are many different choices in today's market for counter top materials for both the kitchen and bath. The most popular among these is natural stone. Granite, which is available in a wide range of colors and patterns, is very durable and ideal for heavy use areas such as the kitchen or family bath. Marble and limestone are softer, more porous stones and need more care. They are more suitable for master baths or powder rooms. All of these stones should be sealed after installation. Soapstone is becoming popular as a low maintenance choice for kitchens with a country feel. This material is given several coats of oil after installation and again periodically depending on the amount of use. Sometimes natural stone cannot be used because of the weight.

Solid surface material offers an alternative that is suitable for use in any area. There are many choices in color and pattern. This material is very low maintenance and can be repaired if damaged. Laminates continue to be widely used as a less expensive material, although they have been updated with wood edges to match cabinetry. The choices in color and pattern are unlimited and allow great flexibility in design. One of the most exciting new materials on the market is poured concrete. Virtually any shape or contour can be made and stains added for color selection. When cured and polished it's a maintenance free surface.

Winter storm packs tough second kick

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

By 9 a.m. Monday in anticipation of a huge blizzard, the line of parents, children and teens at Blockbuster Video was outside the door and wrapped along two store fronts at Cohasset Plaza. Stop & Shop had been picked clean the night before, restocked, and bombarded again that morning. The package store was doing a brisk business and it wasn't even the weekend, and the Exxon station at 3A and Beechwood Street had run out of gas.

At 10 a.m., Carl Sestito of the town's Department of Public Works had good news and bad news for the town's emergency control committee: Cohasset had plenty of sand, but not much salt. Close to 100 tons of sand was scheduled to be delivered later in the day, but he said Cohasset would be lucky to get even two loads of salt.

Town Manager Mark Haddad, at 10:30 a.m., agreed to declare a state of emergency in town as of 3 p.m.

And by 3:30, everyone was ready. The food had been bought, movies rented, shovels dusted off, cat brought in, and children bundled.

Town landmark toppled in storm

The worst blizzard of the fledgling 21st century claimed one victim Tuesday — the 80-foot flag pole on the town common.

The fiberglass pole installed about four years ago broke off about four feet above the base at 3 p.m., police said. The pole was flagless due to the storm.

"I was sitting in my office and I heard a crack," Police Chief Brian Noonan said. "There was a surge in power and the lights blinked. I thought someone had hit a pole."

Within seconds the switchboard at the emergency dispatch center lit up with calls from residents

Group acts to preserve open space

By Mary Ford and Carol Meyer
MFORD@CNC.COM

A group of Cohasset citizens has succeeded in putting the issue of community preservation before the voters at the April 7 Town Election.

While the town has a large amount of open space and historic buildings which add to its small-town charm, proponents feel more must be done to preserve Cohasset's character.

"There is still a lot of developable property in town," said selectman Ronnie McMorris, who, acting as a private citizen, helped lead the effort to obtain enough signatures to get the matter on the ballot.

The goal was to gather enough voter support to adopt the Community Preservation Act — state legislation passed last year that provides a local option to pay for community housing, open space and historic resources.

If adopting the preservation act passes muster at Cohasset polls, it would pave the way for the formation of a community preservation committee in town. That body would ultimately make recommendations on how to best use the funds to enhance affordable housing, open space and historic preservation in Cohasset.

"Some said they are taxed enough, but that was a small minority of people that I talked to. By far the majority were quite receptive to the idea of saving land."
— John Hartshorne, Border Street

There's a price tag attached, however.

The enabling legislation allows cities and towns to levy a property tax surcharge of up to 3 percent per year to create the fund and qualify for a state matching grant.

Cohasset native could be tapped for White House post

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

President George W. Bush has announced he intends to nominate Cohasset native Lincoln P. Bloomfield Jr. as assistant secretary of state for political military affairs.

Bloomfield Jr. should be another familiar face in the White House — he spent 12 years there during the Reagan/Bush years working in various roles in the administration.

After graduating from Cohasset High School in 1970, attending Harvard University, and then the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University, he followed one of his professors down to Washington D.C. during the opening days of the Reagan Administration in 1981.

"He's a professional, and a foreign affairs and defense expert."
— Lincoln Bloomfield, Sr. of Beach Street

"[The professor] went to Washington as the assistant secretary of defense for international security affairs and took Linc with him, and that began his government career," said Lincoln Bloomfield Sr., a distinguished international affairs strategist himself. "He was on the Lebanon desk, which was very quiet, and then all of a sudden he was helicoptering into Beirut under fire with the Secretary of Defense, Casper Weinberger."

In 1983, 241 Marines were killed by a suicide bomber while in Beirut on a peace-keeping mission.

Bloomfield Sr. of Beach Street said his son "did a lot of interesting things" before eventually ending up as Vice-President Dan Quayle's deputy National Security Advisor.

From 1992-1993 Bloomfield Jr. served as deputy assistant secretary of state for Mideast affairs, for places such as North Africa, Syria and Lebanon.

When the Clinton Administration came in, and cleaned house, Bloomfield Jr. joined up with former Bush Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Armitage, and his consulting group Armitage Associates in Arlington, Va., in 1993.

Bloomfield Sr. said along with School construction sub-bids in range

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset officials opened up sub-contracts for the upcoming middle/high school construction project, last Thursday, and the early prognosis is good.

"We're pretty much on target," said Town Manager Mark Haddad who oversaw the opening in his role as the town's Chief Procurement Officer.

The sub-contracts were for such things as the painting, heating, electrical work, and plumbing. Contractors submitting bids to perform the actual construction work take the sub-contract bids and include them in their general construction bids. Those bids were to be opened today at 2 p.m.

Haddad said he was pleased by the number of bids submitted for the sub-contractor work.

"It took us over an hour to open them all," he said after the opening attended by many of the contractors, the town School Building Committee, and other town officials. "I got tired of hearing my own voice."

He said 10 sub-contractors turned in bids for the painting contract, and eight firms submitted bids for the Heating, Venting and Air-Conditioning (HVAC) sub-contract, and a total of 80 contracts in all.

"This is good news," he said.

Schools Supt. Edward Malvey had told the school committee Gene Raymond, the project's architect, was "very, very optimistic" the bids were within the budget range.

Tomorrow, sub-contract bids for the Deer Hill School construction project will be opened, and general bids will be opened on March 27. After that, Malvey said the school committee will decide which contractor to go with, and start work in mid-April.

The two school renovation and expansion projects is expected to cost $41 million.

Under the weather

Last week's school committee was a bit short-handed thanks to a couple of late injuries. Committee member Stephanie Noble was at home nursing a broken wrist suffered while ice-skating on the Cohasset Common pond, chairman Pat Martin told the rest of the board.

Also, the committee had to cancel its scheduled discussion of the department's technology education policy, because technology head Ken Cisneros had to have emergency oral surgery.

"He was told he would not be able to talk tonight – literally," said Martin.

The discussion was rescheduled for next week.

Personnel moves

Schools Supt. Edward Malvey announced the resignation of long-time administrative secretary Ilene Colwill last week. Malvey said Colwill had been on a leave of absence while her husband took a job in Texas, in the hopes she would return. However, Colwill decided to resign when it appeared she would not be back any time soon, and the committee "reluctantly" accepted the resignation.

Also, the school committee approved a two-year leave of absence maternity leave for Osgood School teacher Kristin Blume, effective April 12. She is expected to be out until September, 2003.

School schedule

The school committee approved a basic school calendar for the 2001-2002 school year. School will start Sept. 9, and close for the summer on June 19, 2002.

Cleaning, Osgood technology on school committee slate

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Next Thursday's school committee meeting has the potential to be a hot one. Not only does the committee plan on discussing school department's current policy of technology instruction at the early grades, but also school cleanliness issues.

Both issues have been controversial in the past, with the committee sparring with the board of selectmen at a meeting last month over school cleanliness, and some residents questioning the need for technology instruction for all Osgood School students.

"I think those are the two things that will bring people out," said School Committee Chairman Pat Martin.

The School Committee will meet March 15 at 7:30 p.m. in the middle/high school library.

She said the technology discussion will involve a review of the department's five-year technology education plan. This past year, the Osgood has had to share a technology instructor with the Deer Hill, reducing the amount of time elementary students received technology instruction. In January, Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey told the committee he had freed up enough money to fill the Osgood technology position for the remainder of the year, and last Thursday, said he had hired Heather Carroll for the job.

However, along with the announcement last month came a murmur of disagreement with the need for technology instruction for early elementary students.

"I just don't see the urgent need for kindergartners, first and second graders to have technology," said school committee member Stephanie Noble. "The question of all questions we really have to take a long, hard look at, is should kindergartners be getting the exact same amount of technology as sixth graders?"

"I think those are the two things that will bring people out."
— School Committee Chairman Pat Martin

The following week, a letter signed by 15 residents also questioned the need for technology at the lower grades.

Martin said next Thursday's meeting will be a public discussion, but that those in attendance shouldn't expect any changes in school policy, or budgeting.

"This is a discussion, not a reconsideration of any vote. It's not set up so that we decide whatever gets more support gets it out of budget," she said. "Hopefully afterwards they will know the administration has looked at both sides of the research."

While presenting the school budget to selectmen last month, the discussion broke down into a debate over whether the school committee was spending enough money on keeping the town's three schools clean.

Martin said the committee next Thursday will give the community an update on what has been done, what is being done and what will be done to address that issue.

"This comes out of the fact we weren't able to present all the things at the meeting," she explained. "We hope to answer all those questions, and provide information on things being done, so people understand how it works." She said a lot is being done behind the scenes such as bringing in cleaning crews over school vacations, authorizing additional overtime, and shuffling around cleaning crews. She also hopes to explain why the school department decided to outsource its cleaning services in stages rather than all at once.

Also, Martin said, the town Recycling Committee has asked for time to discuss implementing a recycling program at the middle/high school.

Town tackled problems surrounding underage drinking

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

It was a scene that should be familiar to Cohasset residents: "out-of-control" kids, under-age drinking, arrests, accusations of police picking on the teens.

These aren't examples ripped from the headlines of the Cohasset Mariner, this was the scene in Wellesley last year.

In December of 1999, a high school holiday dance in that town was marred by a group of drunk students and "vomit from corner to corner, " according to published reports. Months later, a 16-year-old left in charge of his neighbor's house to feed a family pet, invited a few friends (100 turned up) over for a few drinks. The party resulted in mayhem and damage to the house.

The split between parents and teens, and police over problems surrounding underage drinking broke down to the point that the town felt the need to intervene. Through a series of group discussions involving residents from all sides of the issue called "study circles," Wellesley was able to establish a dialogue and engage in a public discussion of the town's attitude and behavior towards underage drinking.

Cohasset's Drug & Alcohol Committee hopes to start a similar town dialogue based on Wellesley's model, before things break down further.

"We've talked about it for a few months and been aware of some of the disagreements between parents and police, and issues around drugs and alcohol," said the Rev. Cliff Cutler, the committee's chairman.

Over the summer, police arrested more than two dozen teenagers for underage drinking, including 22 in one night. Cohasset police were criticized by some of the teenagers' parents for arresting first-time offenders. The criticisms were echoed again this past fall when parents questioned police policy regarding under-age drinking at a forum to discuss the middle/high school's risk behavior survey results.

"The idea is that it's helpful for all sides to come together in understanding in a way with less misunderstanding, and less opportunity for dissension."
—The Rev. Cliff Cutler, chairman of the Drug & Alcohol Committee

On the recommendation of the South Shore Board of Health Collaborative liaison, Kathryn Treffry, the committee will host Wellesley Board of Health member Lisa Stone to find out how that town dealt with the issue, at the Drug & Alcohol next meeting on March 14. The collaborative is a regional agency that includes Cohasset.

Stone, a licensed physician, and Harvard University School of Public Health graduate student, was responsible for organizing the study circles in Wellesley. She said the use of study circles is an effective way to discuss a controversial issue on a community-wide basis.

"There are no experts, every one has equal weight and equal opportunity to speak," she explained. "It's a very productive way of talking about."

Stone said Wellesley had 104 people ranging from 15 years old to 88, participate, in 10 study circles. "Study circles meet in four or five sessions and [the group] follows a discussion guide, which is very important," she explained. In the end, the circles present "ideas for action" to the larger group and then task forces are formed to work on the different ideas.

"The feedback we got from people who filled out forms at the end, was that it was an effective way to move the dialogue forward," Stone said.

Cutler hopes the committee will learn about both the process and outcome of Wellesley's experience from Stone. "The idea is that it's helpful for all sides to come together in understanding in a way with less misunderstanding, and less opportunity for dissension," he said.

If nothing else, said Treffry, study circles get "the right people to the table to talk about changing policy."

Next Wednesday's meeting won't feature a study circle, but instead just an opportunity for Stone to explain how the program works.

However, Cutler said the public is still welcome to the meeting. "Anyone can come to the meeting that wants to, but it will be a working committee meeting," he said. "If they come to address their concerns of parenting and policing, that will be premature."

In 1998, Cohasset police made 15 arrests for minors in possession of alcohol. In 1999 the number was 18. But in 2000, 32 males and 26 females were arrested for being in possession of alcohol while under-age. So far in 2001, Cohasset police had made seven arrests.

Town census

The town census for 2001 has been mailed to each household. The local census is primarily used to maintain voting and jury lists but it also aids in school enrollment projections, public safety and senior citizens' needs.

The local census also establishes proof of residency, which is often needed for certain privileges, such as transfer station stickers and cemetery rights, certain veterans' benefits and reduced tuition rates at state colleges and universities.

Dog forms were enclosed. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31, 2001. Forms need to be returned as soon as possible. If you did not receive one, contact the town clerk's office.

Candidates' night

TheCohasset Chamber of Commerce and the Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers are sponsoring a Candidates Night from 7:30-9:30 p.m., March 19 at the Cohasset Selectmen's Office at Town Hall. It will be televised on Channel 10.

Cohasset Chamber President Kimberly La Torraca will serve as the moderator. The "Question gallery" will be comprised of local reporters, and live calls from viewers.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

HELLO COHASSET

I hope this column finds everyone well and that you have all survived the storm that wasn't. Yes, I was a little disappointed with the lack of snow but we certainly are learning that Mother Nature has a mind of her own and cannot be counted on to be predictable.

Although the first reaction is to blame the weather people when things don't go as planned, they are just doing the job that they chose to do. I give them so much credit, both for trying to figure out the ever-changing weather, but for dealing with all of us who think it is such an easy thing to do.

ART SHOW

Well, a Cohasset resident is putting on a one-lady art show at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library from now until April 25.. Judy St. Peter, has on display her beautiful paintings of animals, particularly elephants at the library. The exhibit is in cooperation with the South Shore Art Center. A reception was held this past Sunday and she and her artwork were very well received. The library is open on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday from 9 a.m.-9 p.m., Friday and Saturday 9a.m. -5 p.m. and Sun from 2-5 p.m.. Make sure to try and get in to view these beautiful works of art. I know that Judy's friends and family are so proud of her, congratulations Judy!

BABY GIRL

We have a birth to announce. Erin Margaret Nardo was born on Feb. 20 at 3:56 p.m. weighing in at 7 lbs., 3 oz and was 19.5" long. Erin's mom and dad, Lauren and Charles of Weymouth, are so thrilled with her as is her big brother Joseph and grandmother, Elaine Nardo of Hull. Congratulations to all of you, there is nothing like a new little baby in our world!

CORRECTIONS DEPARTMENT

STAFF PHOTO/ALAN CHAPMAN

This is Leah Curren of Scituate pretending to be sick so she can stay home from school in the Cohasset Dramatic Club production of "How to Eat Like a Child" on stage at Town Hall. The Mariner incorrectly identified her last week. For ticket information about the show call, 383-1718.

HEALING ART

Calling all photographers and non-photographers alike.

Jan Phillips, author of "God is at Eye Level — Photography as a Healing Art" and "Marry Your Muse-Making, a Lasting Commitment to Your Creativity"(Winner of the 1998 Ben Franklin Award) is coming to the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset on March 16 and 17 to present a one- or two-day workshop series. Call the church office at 383-0345 to register. The deadline is March 12.

NEW GRANDDAUGHTER

Another little cutie has joined us in this world. Mike and Mary Ward announce the birth of their first grandchild, Julia Mae Haskell! Julia was born to their daughter, Michelle and her husband Steve on Feb. 6 at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. Julia weighed in at 9 lbs., 6 oz and was 21 inches long. She is quite a little beauty, if her grandparents do say so themselves! Enjoy her and congratulations.

TROOP VISIT

I had another message from Georgine Butman, who as most of you know, moved with her husband Bruce and daughter Amelia to Maine. Georgine's old Girl Scout troop went for a visit and were able to enjoy the mountains, skiing, skating and what it is like to be a musher in a dog sled race. Great fun was had by all. This troop is a Cadette/Senior Troop from Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate.

Linda and Allen Snowdale were up at Squaw Mountain at the same time with their sons, David and Michael. Every day, a wave went out to them from the Butmans, who look at Squaw from their home.

DEAN'S LIST

Megan Fahey from Cohasset recently graduated with a BBA in Marketing from UMass Amherst and achieved dean's list status for the fifth semester in a row! What great accomplishments Megan!

South Shore Art center looking for new director

Dillon Bustin resigns after four years

The South Shore Art Center announced the resignation of Executive Director Dillon Bustin, following almost four years of leadership. Bustin is leaving to assume the position of Director of the Emerson Umbrella Center for the Arts in Concord, Mass.

At the March 2 opening reception of the Beginner Mind: Zen and the Art of Kaji Aso exhibition, President of the Board of Directors Vcevy Strekalovsky said: "It is with deep regret that we make this announcement. Dillon Bustin has accomplished a great deal during his tenure at the Art Center. Programming, exhibitions, courses and workshops, and special events have all achieved a new level of excellence under his direction. The Center is becoming known not only for the quality of its visual arts offerings, but for its musical and gallery programs as well. We will miss Dillon and wish him all the best in his new endeavor."

Reflecting on his years at the Center, Bustin wrote:

"My memories are a torrent of vivid images: engaged and productive students both children and adults, in the teaching studios; the rapt and attentive faces of audience members in the galleries; strolling throngs of people enjoying the festival; the jovial crowds at opening receptions. In and among all these memories are unforgettable pieces of artwork—paintings, drawings, prints, photographs, and sculptures—and the artists who created them....I have been privileged to know the diverse range of artists, art instructors, and students who make up the core community of the South Shore Art Center. I have been pleased to work with generous benefactors, a loyal staff, and willing volunteers."

"I have been pleased to work with generous benefactors, a loyal staff, and willing volunteers."
— Dillon Bustin

A search committee has been formed to begin the process of finding a new executive director. Program Director Sarah Hannan is currently serving as acting director.

The South Shore Art Center is a regional center for the arts with two galleries offering changing exhibitions of contemporary work by regional and national artists and a year-round schedule of courses and workshops in the visual arts. The Center hosts the country's oldest outdoor art and craft festival. This year's 46th Festival on the Common will once again take place Father's Day Weekend, June 15, 16 and 17. For more information call 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org.

Sped PAC gives parents resource for their questions

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

If you're a parent, and your child's teacher one day says he or she would like to test your son or daughter for a learning disability, would you know the next step?

While some parents would, others wouldn't. What's more, being told their child might qualify for special education could result in concern.

Fortunately, Cohasset parents with children in special education have formed a parents advisory council (PAC) to help fellow parents deal with the issues that accompany a child being placed in an independent education program (IEP), as part of the special-education process.

"As a parent, when you're told your child might have a learning disability, it's a shock and a bit confusing," said PAC Secretary Allison Moskow, a parent of a special ed student. "You're handed a brochure that says 'here's what we're seeing' and that gives you your options. But you don't usually get that until after the testing and you're signing the IEP."

PAC Vice-President Jamie Williams said she wants to reach out to the parents of the 225 special ed students in the Cohasset School Department. "What is needed, we believe, is a network of parents that support and educate each other, that says what is available in the community and surrounding area for remediation for children with special needs," she said.

Special education in the modern school department is no longer defined by children with physical disabilities or mental retardation. Special education needs can range from a minor reading problem to a combination of physical and emotional disabilities, or cerebral palsy. No matter what the disability, or how minor, under state law Cohasset must still educate that child. How it goes about doing that, however, can vary.

Part of the PAC's focus is on holding workshops and hosting speakers to discuss some of the issues and alternative learning methods available, said Williams. One such program will be held Monday, March 5, at 7 p.m. in the Osgood School music room, featuring Dr. Michael Weiler who will make a presentation on Attention Deficit Disorder, Attention Deficit-Hyperactivity Disorder, and a new disorder that involves hypoactive children, particularly in girls.

"What we're doing at this point is holding a series of workshops and seminars to educate and expose alternatives," said Williams. "What works, what doesn't, and give more information of disabilities that our children have and work from there."

The PAC's new board of Williams, Moskow and President Laura DeSestito is new this year, replacing the board formally headed by Kim Maynard and former School Committee member Maureen Jerz.

"What is needed, we believe, is a network of parents that support and educate each other, that says what is available in the community and surrounding area for remediation for children with special needs."
— PAC Vice-President Jamie Williams

"When a child goes into an IEP, it's a very legalistic process," said Jerz. "Sometimes parents feel intimidated by the language and getting their child through the system." She said that by having a forum where parents can talk to each other, it helps newcomers feel "more comfortable" about the process.

Williams explained the general process a child will go through. "A child's disability is first recognized in the classroom by a teacher, and he or she will go to the parent and say, 'I find Johnny has trouble reading, you may want to have some tests to see if there's something there we can help,'" she said. "They'll administer whatever type of test, and find maybe it's just a weakness, and based on the assessment, the child is given an individual education plan that spells out what kind of extra help or what kind of teaching program can be given to bring him up to level."

As time passes, Williams said, the child's IEP will be reevaluated to see what works, and whether more needs to be done.

It's during the testing period and initial IEP where the PAC can help parents understand what's going on. Williams said the role of the PAC isn't to advocate for one particular child, but for special education in general.

The current trend, both nationally and in Cohasset, said Moskow, is for inclusion, where students are kept in the classroom.

"Personally I feel a lot of kids benefit from being in the same learning environment as their peers," said Moskow.

Williams said PAC meetings are also open to parents whose child does not have a special need, and also for faculty.

On April 4, the PAC will feature a workshop by the Federation for Children on 'basic rights' for special education students and parents. On May 2, there will be a workshop on the new IEP forms, and Cohasset Student Services Coordinator Stephen Kaplan will meet with the group on June 6.

OPINION

The storm of the century that wasn't

The plows were ready.

The sand trucks were loaded.

Despite snow removal budgets that in many communities were depleted by the end of January, DPW directors had town employees and private contractors geared up for three very long days and nights of work to keep local roadways clear and navigable.

After all, people still needed to get to work — in most cases.

In others, businesses all over the region including ours began, sending out e-mails reminding employees about company snow policies and human resource directors, anticipating the storm to gradually worsen, scurried about compiling contact lists with home and cellular phone numbers in case the office should — yeah, right — close for the day.

By Sunday night superintendents all over the South Shore canceled school to the delight of students, and folks fearful of running out of milk and bread stood in enormous supermarket check out lines to ensure there would be sufficient peanut butter and jelly sandwiches to get them through the latest storm of the century.

I wonder, as I hear gleeful meteorologists proclaim the latest, to be the greatest storm in recent memory, how can we have more than one "storm of the century." In my lifetime there have been at least three storms so proclaimed, and considering we've only just started this particular century, I'd say we're better off reserving that judgement for now.

The long forecast three-day storm was just what we hearty New Englanders can expect at this time of year, it just wasn't as bad as we were told it would be.

I don't intend to bash our weather forecasters, they have a job to do. Unfortunately that job involves studying a lot of computer models and things like Doppler Radar which in some cases can provide valuable weather information especially where tornadoes are concerned.

But in our area, which lies far outside Tornado Alley, the mystifying snow/rain line which decides whether we need to break out the snow blower or turn on the sump pump in the basement, is at best unpredictable. And I am left along with others, to wonder if weather forecasting wasn't more accurate back in the old days before computers, when folks determined a storm was coming based on cloud formations, weather vanes, and unusual animal behavior. Today, too many computer models, tell too many meteorologists, too many things leading them to make premature and often inaccurate predictions.

Communities north and west of the city got significant snowfall amounts, but not the three feet some were calling for at the start of the storm. Beach erosion, flooding and high winds were a problem coastal towns. Brant Rock and Humarock were — as they often are in northeast storms — impassable during the high tide Tuesday morning. And as highway department workers began work clearing the rocks and debris the waves tossed onto coastal roads, the long predicted snow began to fall in earnest. Knowing another high tide was less than 12 hours away no doubt made theirs a frustrating and chilly task.

But for most of us South of Boston, this was no storm of the century, no rival to the devastating Blizzard of '78 —and that's nothing to complain about.

Still people will complain.

Some complained that school was closed on what turned out to be a rainy Monday. On Tuesday, others complained that school was open and flooded roadways made it difficult for students to get to their bus stops.

Our six-month winters in New England gives us all a lot to complain about.

But it is winter. And even if our forecasters miss the mark more than they hit it, it's safe to predict there will be inclement weather — be it rain, sleet or varying amounts of snow.

Keep the shovels and galoshes handy, no matter what you hear on the Weather Channel and remember, spring is just a few weeks away.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Youth sports

TO THE EDITOR:

I appreciate Soccer League President Wallace St. John's input in the last Mariner regarding my response to the (column in the sports section, by Julie Nevero), "Parents Fight, Kids Watch." 1/25/01 Mariner. My entire response was in the context of that article. Many, who decide to comment, never read the first line of my letter indicating that, nor bothered to read the original article.

Mr. St John didn't describe the fact that I was on the original board which appointed him as coordinator, helped usher in the fabulous "Play Soccer" program and the computerized system of registration, helped plan, build and construct the shed, helped measure fields for lining, invented the water-filled inner-tube goal counterweight system used after 6 and 12 in. spikes, the previous method of holding down goals, resulted in 6 and 12 in. spikes being haphazardly left on the field, and successfully coached, co-coached and after many games, was on the field clearing up the trash and lost clothing. I was also (cheerfully) admonished in the fall about attending the classroom section of the "C" coaching clinic for review when I have the higher "F" level. Considering my role as a teacher, and several years playing experience with professional guidance and coaching, I think have enough qualification to "ramble" a bit.

Some leagues excel. The Cohasset Soccer Club is one. It improved when it needed to years back, and the results show, as we predicted they would back then. Pop Warner is also amazing considering the type of sport and its risk factors. Many other leagues have great coaching and player developmental programs. Others don't. The fact that too many organizations are politically motivated in their actions and philosophies hurts youth sports, and is probably its biggest problem. No youth activity should be trusted to just any volunteer, or their cronies.

Fortunately I was out of town for the basketball horror show of this past weekend. Perhaps it's distressing to some that they can't blame me for it. Ten year-old kids hurt, crying, frustrated, and angry, and teams being pulled off the court because control couldn't be maintained isn't my idea of what sports should be about. The events were not, per Wallace's description of Cohasset sports, "a positive model to other communities in the state and in the country." Such occurrences seem to be on the increase here in town, and this was just one of many stories. Perhaps worst of all, the actions were an insult to Don Demichele, basketball's head, and a class act who deserves better people to work with who can handle 10 year-old boys basketball.

I don't make up the situations I describe, never have. The negatives are also not out of "[my] experience" as Wallace insinuated. In "my experience," the players I coached had a very rough season, but they were champions who stuck it out to the end. They received praise, encouragement, and a gift certificate I made for them to go to Village Butcher with a parent.

Too few talk about the problems, for whatever reason, so little gets done until somebody gets hurt, or as in Reading, kills a person.

Maybe the Mariner will post the original article and letters on their website so perhaps a few people will look at reality, and themselves, instead of looking to whack the messenger.

COHASSET CARES

The crunch is on

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Maybe it's because it's spring [well, almost]. There's a lot going on right now with respect to the environment —in town, in the country, in the world. Some of it I can share with you and some I can't, but here's a start:

Bill McKibben, author of "The End of Nature" [1989], which I reviewed here recently, and also of "Hope, Human and Wild: True Stories of Living Lightly on the Earth" [1995], which I am in the process of reading, a fascinating and encouraging book, will be speaking in Cambridge Thursday, March 8, — the day you might be reading this at First Parish Unitarian Church, 3 Church St. Harvard Square, 7:30 p.m.

Things are hopping at the RTF, some things which we have some control over and some things over which we have little control. More later on this. The important thing for everyone to keep in mind is July 1, when Pay-As-You-Throw goes into effect. I spoke with one person today who says his goal is to pay for one bag — for the one year [he means to do this honestly — just ecologically, a real inspiration to us all]. Another person put it another way to me today: that homeowners should be able to recycle almost everything. Get ready.

Lastly, for now, the word I hear, is that our present administration in Washington will be doing wonders for the environment — much more than the former administration, even with Gore, ironically — just because of who they are and what they stand for. See you next time.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

School committee: Do you think there is too much emphasis on technology in the lower grades at the expense of other subjects?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Pat Martin

In order to engage in the current debate on whether the emphasis on technology in the lower grades is too great or whether other subjects may be compromised at its expense, one must first understand an overlying context regarding current state regulations on school curriculum. The state has developed curriculum frameworks by grade for all subjects which now includes technology. It is expecting school districts to follow and implement these frameworks and in order to determine how well schools have done implementing curriculum, the state measures its comprehension through another state mandate, MCAS testing.

The second issue people need to realize is the Cohasset School District has a five year technology plan which outlines our goals for implementing, teaching and using technology. It describes technology as the ability to access, process and use a vast array of informational resources for enriching the learning process. Although we are currently using a lab format to teach technology, while integrating grade level curriculum themes into a once a week 40 minute session, the goal for the near future is to bring technology into the classroom where it can be taught and used more as a tool to augment learning in all subjects.

As chairperson of the School Committee, I have scheduled a technology discussion to take place at our regularly scheduled March 15 meeting, 7:30pm in the high school. We encourage anyone who would like additional information on our technology plan to join us then.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Adrienne MacCarthy

In addressing this issue, one must revisit the commitment the Town made to integrating technology into the school system as outlined in the technology plan adopted in 1997. The plan outlines the town's commitment to bring our school community into the 21st century. Since then, our town has made a significant financial commitment to enable a total integration of technology into the K-12 curriculum.

I believe in the objectives of the plan as stated and therefore, no, I do not feel the technology is being emphasized too much in the lower grades. The question, as posed, would lead one to believe technology is being taught as a subject unto itself. On the contrary, through my involvement in the schools, I see technology being used more as a means to enhance the learning experience of our children. The children spend no more than 40 minutes a week receiving instruction on how to utilize technology. This instruction is done in conjunction with topics being taught in their other classes. In this manner, they are learning to use technology as a tool.

Both our Curriculum and Technology Coordinators agree that technology needs to be integrated at the lower grades. This way we can insure that our students will be empowered to be active seekers of knowledge, as they matriculate through our schools.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Mark DeGiacomo

The proper amount of technology training that should be given in the elementary grades is one of the hottest topics in education today. It is also a topic that the School Committee recently studied in connection with our consideration of whether to reinstate a technology position at the elementary school level.

Parents and the experts are fairly evenly divided on the issue of how much, if any, technology should be taught in the elementary grades. However, our administrators are unanimous in the opinion that an appropriate amount of technology should be taught at the elementary level. In the end, based on my review of the research and unanimous opinion of our administrators, I voted in favor of hiring a technology aide who would cover Osgood so our existing technology teacher could dedicate all her time to Deer Hill students.

Our school district is committed to providing our students with the technology training they need to reach their full potential in the 21st Century. Our emphasis is to train teachers to use technology as an educational tool and to gradually introduce basic skills to the children. While I am confident that our administrators and teachers will keep the amount of time students are taught computer skills at an appropriate level, we must keep an open mind about this important issue. We must diligently monitor future studies as well as our own experiences and be willing to make adjustments if necessary to strike the right balance for our students.

Planning board: What's your stance on allowing two-family homes in town?

PLANNING BOARD/ Peter Pratt

I support the Planning Board's effort to allow for so called "in-law apartments" in Cohasset under controlled circumstances. The Board's proposal is reflected in warrant article 21 for this year's annual town meeting. If passed, this article will authorize "Accessory Dwelling Unit(s)" in existing homes.

This proposed zoning bylaw change will hopefully support our senior citizens who desire to continue to live in the homes they have owned for many years.

Article 21 contains several restrictions to ensure that Cohasset does not experience an uncontrolled number of accessory unit conversions. These restrictions include the requirement that new permits for these units be limited to ten (10) per year starting in calendar year 2003.

If passed, Article 21 would not authorize 'two-family homes' which your question references. I do not support changes to our zoning bylaws allowing for greater deployment of multiple dwelling units in Cohasset, except for Article 21, beyond what is authorized today.

We need to determine if each new designated Accessory Dwelling Unit may count as a recognized unit of affordable housing under state guidelines. If these units do so qualify, the passage of Article 21 will further the Town's compliance with state mandated affordable housing thresholds. We have both a legal and a moral obligation to provide for affordable housing in town, while maintaining the special character and natural resources of Cohasset.

Passage of Article 21 will be an important step towards achieving a better balance between our goals of housing affordability and community protection.

Planning Board/ Richard Brown

Cohasset is in need of affordable housing, and we should support two-family housing when possible. At the same time, a balance must be maintained so that the character of the town is not adversely affected.

I support the Planning Board article which is before Town Meeting to allow families, under certain conditions, to convert their residences to two-family.

Selectmen: Has the Town Manager Act stripped the Board of Selectmen of too much power?

SELECTMAN/Tom Callahan

No. The Act only served to separate administrative functions from the Board so as to achieve the best of both worlds – executive power and policy making within the hands of an elected, citizen Board and day-to-day managerial authority in the hands of a professional manager. The Town Manager is the Chief Administrative Officer and Chief Financial Officer of the town but the Board remains the Chief Executive Officer. The Board makes policy and the Town Manager implements policy. Yes, the Town Manager can make as well as implement certain administrative and personnel policies. However, the Town Manager must ultimately answer to the Board, and thus, a politically astute and job-conscious town manager will neither go out of a limb nor make major administrative policy without consultation with the Board. That is how things now work in Cohasset, and so the Board's authority is not diminished. The Board's authority is only diminished if it allows that to occur, and that is a matter of personalities, not of inherent institutional weakness.

SELECTMAN/Merle Brown

No. We have been three years with the town manager. Things are working OK.

Next week's questions

For selectman and planning board candidates: Why (or why not) should voters support Cohasset adopting the Community Preservation Act at the polls April 7?

For school committee candidates: Should hiring a business manager for the school department be a budgetary priority?

Answers must be received by 5 p.m. Monday. Responses, which must be no longer than 250 words, may be sent by e-mail to mford@cnc.com, sent by fax to 7441-2931 or dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. For more information, call Mary Ford at 741-2933. Candidates, who are opposed or unopposed are welcome to submit photos and formal announcements of their candidacies. The Mariner will also publish a candidates' corner that is limited to a few lines (about 150 words) from any candidate who wishes to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers and the like.

Save the true martini

Heaven help us!

The 2000 Best of Guide, published by Citysearch.com, the web site of entertainment information, has chosen the chocolate mint martini, concocted by the Martini Ranch in Chicago, as one of the five best mixed drinks in the country.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

"Why would anyone drink a straight martini when they could have a rich and creamy chocolate one?" a customer, Dante Williams, asked Maria Montoya, a reporter from USA Today, who had the unmitigated gall to publish the quote.

Well, if no one else will tell you, Dante, I will. It's because the rich and creamy chocolate one ain't one, that's why. It sounds like a milk shake you'd get on a bad day at Mad Martha's — and then go out back and throw up.

As everyone knows, and if they don't know, let me remind them, that a true martini is made of six parts gin, one part French dry vermouth, stirred and poured gently into a cocktail glass, and served with an olive.

When I started tending bar at the Boston House in Oak Bluffs on Martha's Vineyard during college vacation in the summer of '49 the book also called for orange bitters but no one ever used it and pretty soon it was dropped from the recipe.

The pace quickened when someone else sneaked a baby onion into the drink and called it a "Gibson."

I arrived on the Vineyard confident that I had all the possible situations covered. I knew how to make a martini. I knew how to open a bottle of beer. And I had the Bible of the trade, the Old Mr. Boston Bartenders Guide, by my side.

Wouldn't you know that the first drink I was called on the make was something called a Salty Dog? Old Mr. Boston failed me. No one in the employ of the Boston House had ever heard of it, although I was told later it was popular of the West Coast.

Thus, I was faced with the embarrassment of having to ask the customer himself how to make my first drink. If I remember right, it's made of gin (or vodka), grapefruit juice and salt to taste around the rim of the glass.

But I digress . . .

The true martini started down the road that leads to perdition sometime in the '50s when someone stuck a twist of lemon peel in place of the olive. The pace quickened when someone else sneaked a baby onion into the drink and called it a "Gibson."

Then came vodka in place of gin and then . . .

Chicago's Martini Ranch has no less than 40 different kinds of "martinis" for sale at anywhere from $6.75 to $12 a pop, including the Angel Food Cake "martini" — dark crème de cacao, Kahlua, chocolate syrup and ice cream with sponge cake.

And the Mint Chocolate Chip "martini," which features blue curacao liqueur and peppermint schnapps.

Go ask for either of those at Haddad's Ocean Café on the Brant Rock Esplanade and see what they say and how they say it.

As for me, I'll still take my olives in their natural habitat, surrounded by six parts gin and one part dry vermouth.

Pat Martin

Pat Martin announces her re-election bid

Pat Martin, current chairperson of the School Committee has announced that she will seek reelection to another three year term. Pat cited the need and importance for continuity and an established knowledge base on the school board as well as her desire to see the schools continuing to move in a positive direction as her two main reasons for her decision. She stated she would also like to build on the work she has done on the committee over the past three years which includes the establishment of alternative funding, strategic planning, policy revision and increased and enhanced communication within town and school departments.

"We have one of the finest school districts in the commonwealth and its stewardship is of utmost importance. I will work to ensure its excellence while continuing to address and solve the issues that confront us," she said.

Pat and her husband Dan have three children ages 10, 7 and 4, are members of the Second Congregational Church and live on Linden Drive. Pat, a former school teacher, received her masters degree in Social Work Administration from Rutgers University in 1986 and currently works part time as the Domestic Violence Intervention Specialist at Wellspring MultiService Center in Hull.

MacCarthy to run for school board

Adrienne MacCarthy is pleased to announce her candidancy for School Committee. Adrienne and her husband, John, reside at 85 Doane St. with their three sons who all attend the Cohasset Public Schools.

Adrienne brings a proven record of experience, accomplishments and commitment to the race. For the past five years, she has served on the School Building/Facilities Committee. During this time, Adrienne has been deeply involved in overseeing two of the largest school projects ever to be undertaken by the town — the $10 million Osgood School and the current $42 million Deer Hill/Middle-High School renovation projects. Adrienne also holds seat on the Executive Board of the PSO as a Parent Representative to the Deer Hill School. It is through her PSO experience that enabled Adrienne to gain an insight to the needs and issues of concern facing the schools on a daily basis.

Adrienne MacCarthy

Adrienne has the necessary experience. She is well versed on topics ranging from multi-million dollar construction projects to multi-colored dry board markers. But Adrienne is also about accomplishments. Her most visible accomplishment would have to be the construction of the $24,000 playground outside of the new Osgood School. What makes this so impressive was the fact that when Adrienne realized there were no funds available for a playground she spear-headed a grassroots committee "The Friends of Cohasset School Playground." This committee raised $24,000, purchased and installed the playground, all within a four-month period. Last Spring, Adrienne and the committee raised additional funds and installed a second playground at the Deer Hill School.

Adrienne feels that it is her experience and her demonstrated commitment to improve the schools that are the essential assets that she will bring to the School Committee. If elected, Adrienne's first order of business will be to establish a "Priority List" of the schools' needs so that in an event unanticipated funds become available, the committee will have a direction for spending. Secondly, Adrienne feels the school committee needs to refine and update its goals and develop a strategic plan to bring our schools into the 21st century. She also would like to explore and implement full utilization of our schools for after school and summer enrichment programs to bring in added revenue.

Adrienne MacCarthy welcomes any questions or comments via Email: MACCARTHY5@aol.com. Contributions to her campaign may be made to "Committee to Elect Adrienne", David Chase, Treasurer c/o 31 Border Street, Cohasset, MA 02025

The Committee to "Elect Adrienne" includes:

Anna Abbruzzese, JoAnne Chittick, David Chase, treasurer, Mary Foley, Sara and Jim Porter, Ralph Kidder, Mary Goodwin, Maureen Jerz, Susan Galligan, co-chairman, Lucia Flibotte, co-chairman.

Now all the town needed was some snow.

The 2001 version of the 'Perfect Storm,' the angry younger brother of the Blizzard of '78, the storm to shake New England back into its cold, wintry past sputtered and stuttered along the South Shore, much like a 1982 Yugo on a chilly morning.

Cohasset schoolchildren benefited from the early paranoia surrounding the storm, as school was cancelled for Monday.

As Cohasset and the South Shore got drizzled upon Monday afternoon and night, other areas were getting nailed. Worcester and Middlesex County were truly experiencing a good-old fashioned winter storm.

But at 7:30 a.m. Tuesday morning, when the first wave crashed over the Atlantic Avenue causeway, things turned a bit worse in Cohasset. Though Monday was a bust, Tuesday's backlash lived up to its expectations, dumping upwards of six inches in town, most coming after dusk, knocking down power lines, a flagpole (see accompanying story), and flooding low-lying roads.

While some towns such as Chelmsford and Concord received as much as 30 inches, Cohasset was for the most part spared the brunt of the storm.

"We had a very good couple of days," said town Director of Civil Defense and Emergency Preparedness Arthur Lehr. He said beside some "awfully slippery roads," minor flooding, and scattered power outages, the town came through unscathed. "MassElectric had a crew on duty and most of the time they sat around, which is good too, I guess."

The hard snow didn't start in town until early that afternoon and picked up a bit by nightfall.

"Last night was messy," Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said Wednesday. He reported a half-dozen accidents in town, but no serious injuries.

The weather was just bad enough to call off school Tuesday and Wednesday, giving Cohasset schoolchildren a mini-vacation.

The only real havoc caused was thanks to abnormally high tides, coupled with the strong storm surge, and high winds resulted in a dangerous high-tides Tuesday and Wednesday morning. At one point, said Noonan, the Bow Street/Jerusalem Road intersection was under three feet of water. "The sea was hurling rocks the size of softballs," said Officer William Quigley.

Police had more of a problem clearing spectators away from the wave wash along Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue. "There was a lot of SUV's all over town going through barricades we had set up," Noonan said. He also said town police had been working double shifts during the storm, and had two dispatchers on duty. Fire Chief Roger Lincoln had up to 15 firefighters and paramedics on-call Monday and Tuesday, in order to help-out mutual aid calls from Hull and Scituate.

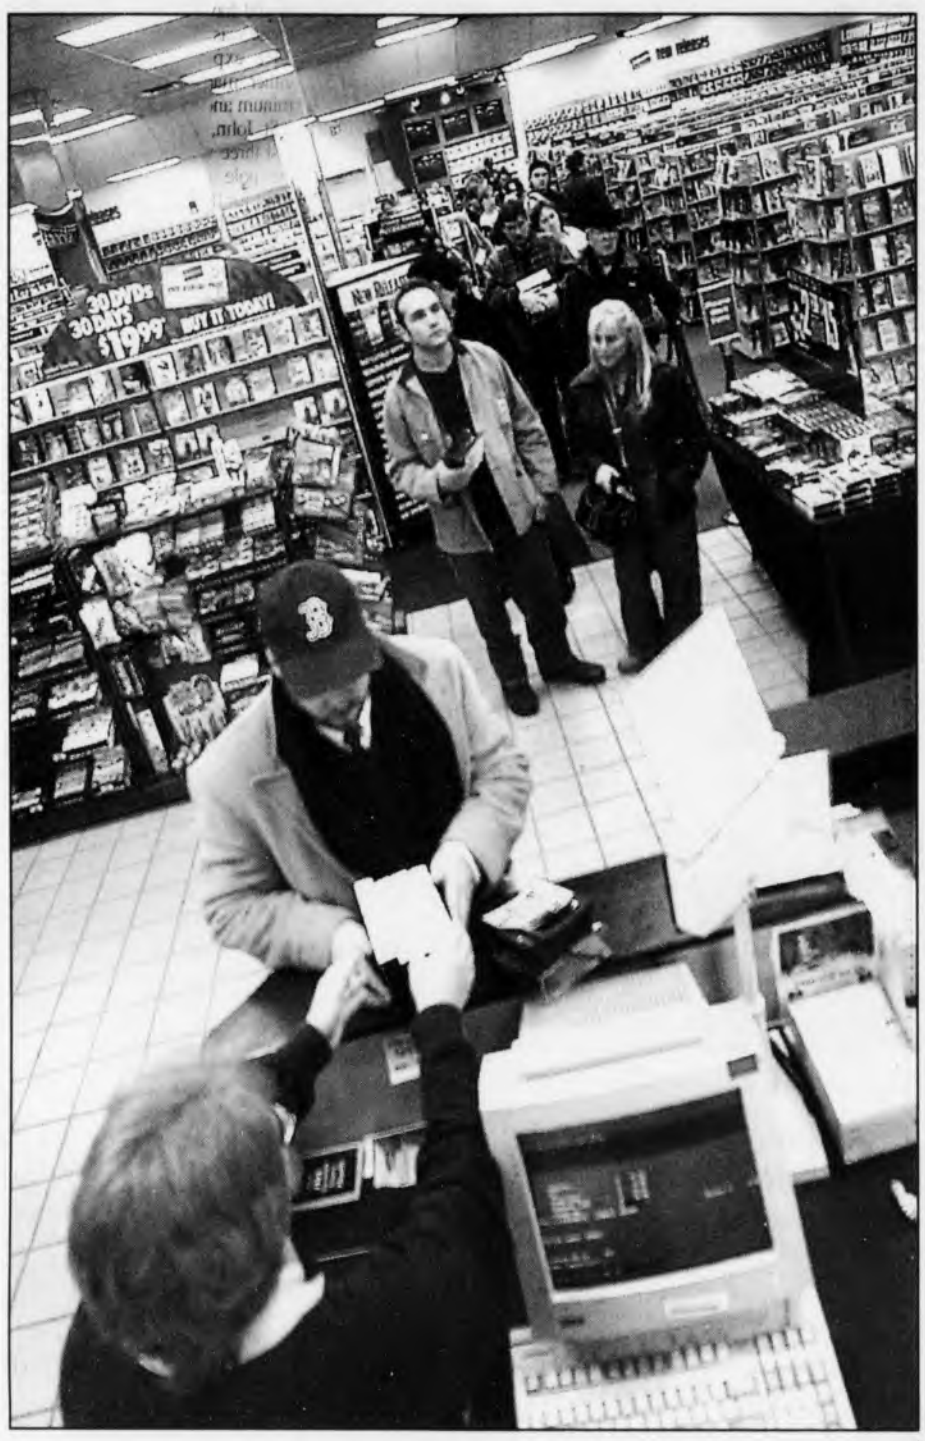
Lehr said he closed the emergency shelter at the high school after Wednesday morning's high-tide, and said the town's state of emergency would end later that afternoon. His next worry, Lehr said, was a storm threatening to dump another foot of snow for the weekend.

That news would surely be music to local stores' ears. If the bare shelves at Stop & Shop Sunday evening were any indication, Cohasset was undoubtedly over-prepared for this storm.

"The last two and a half days we've done almost double the business," said Stop & Shop manager Eddie Samuel, who added the store had actually run out of a few items.

He said it was very busy on Saturday, and Sunday was even busier than Saturday.

"We had almost all 17 check-outs going," he said. The store was able to restock over Sunday night, and experienced a little burst of business Monday morning, before emptying out. By 2:30 Monday afternoon, the store was a ghost town. Samuel said the downside of having such a busy weekend was that "for the next couple of days, the store will look like this."



At Blockbuster Video, the line reached 22 people deep Monday afternoon, after getting a running start that morning.

"It's been like this since Friday," said store manager Margaret Doval.

Apparently, while the kids have been picking out movies and video games to rent, their parents were next door picking out what type of wine to buy.

"It's been busy since 9 a.m.," said Michael, behind the counter at Cohasset Liquors. When asked how many people has come through the doors since Saturday, he said "hundreds easily," and expected more.

"I'll be here until the power goes out."

Town landmark toppled in storm

reporting the pole had fallen down.

Apparently the pole hit the wires where it broke again and sent a surge through the lines.

The pole replaced a wooden one that was taken down because it was rotting and had stood there for decades.

"It busted about four feet up," said Selectman Merle Brown. "We were worried about the old one falling down and that one had stayed there 50 years."

A pole has stood on the common for nearly 150 years. The first one was installed in 1861 by W. B. Johnson; then two subsequent poles were given to the town in 1915 and 1946 in memory of George G. Crocker. The new pole was installed in October 1997.

Building inspector Bob Egan said the fiberglass pole is advertised as being able to sustain winds of 120 miles per hour.

"It was windy, but not that windy," he said. Egan explained the pole broke off near a door that opens to the halyard housed inside the pole.

Wallace St. John of Eagle Flag Company in North Weymouth, which obtained the pole for the town, said the pole — that is hollow — is covered under a 10-year warranty.

"That really surprises me," he said. "We've installed several of those and never had one break."

But St. John said an investigation would have to determine what the cause was.

He explained poles today are either made of fiberglass or aluminum and are always hollow.

St. John, a Cohasset resident, said just three weeks ago he worked on the pole to install new retaining rings for the flag.

"I'm glad no one was hurt," he said. "I've never heard of one falling ever."

Plastic Laminate Products manufactured the pole in New Hampshire.

Pilgrim Cooperative Bank donated the $12,000 needed to replace the wooden pole with fiberglass replacement 3-1/2 years ago.

Group acts to preserve open space

mending the town consider adopting a surcharge of 1.5 percent, calculated after exempting the first $100,000 of the property's assessed valuation. The 1.5 percent surcharge would be on the real estate tax, not on the value of the house.

Taxes collected under the Community Preservation Act would not be included under Proposition 2-1/2, the tax cap that limits the amount a town can raise its annual levy.

If the ballot question meets with voters' approval, the estimated annual revenues expected would be about $200,000. The owner of a home assessed at $350,000 would pay about $78 annually.

John Hartshorne of Border Street, president of the Cohasset Conservation Trust, a private organization established in 1968 to preserve open land, said there are several parcels the town might eye if it had the money.

"It's no secret we're hopeful Cohasset can persuade the Barnes' family to allow us to purchase a significant part of the 32 acres next to Wheelwright Park that they have on the market," he said. "Also, there's the so-called Wolf Pit property next to the reservoir." Developer Wayne Sawchuk is planning to build a 22-unit senior housing complex at the Wolf Pits site.

Hartshorne said he had no trouble getting people to sign the petition to put the question on the ballot.

"Most readily accepted it with just the words 'open space,'" he said. "Some said they are taxed enough, but that was a small minority of people that I talked to. By far the majority were quite receptive to the idea of saving land."

The Community Preservation Act establishes a Massachusetts Community Preservation Trust Fund to be funded with statewide surcharges on real estate recording and registration fees, at an estimated $26 million per year. Eighty percent would be distributed on a matching basis to local communities that adopt the act. If Cohasset collected $200,000, the state would match up to 70 percent of that figure or $140,000 – giving the town an annual total of $340,000.

Community preservation legislation is designed to help communities plan ahead for sustainable growth and raise funds to achieve their goals, officials say.

Community preservation funds may be used to purchase land, easements or restrictions to protect existing and future water supply areas; agricultural, forest or coastal lands; frontage to inland water bodies; wildlife habitat; nature preserves; and scenic vistas.

Funds could also be utilized for the acquisition, preservation, rehabilitation or restoration of buildings or real property determined by the local historic preservation commission to be significant to the history, archaeology, architecture or culture of the community or is listed or eligible for listing on the state register of historic places.

The community preservation committee would be comprised of members of the town's planning board, conservation commission, parks department, historical commission and housing authority in addition to other citizens at large. Public meetings would be held to discuss the town's community preservation needs and opportunities. Town Meeting is required to spend or set aside at least 10 percent of the revenues for non-recreational open space, historic preservation and community housing.

Voters are also being asked to consider adopting the Norfolk County open space plan at the March 31 annual Town Meeting. That plan would not involve a tax increase. However, the town would have to file a home rule petition asking the Legislature to allow the county to divert county deed excise taxes to its own municipal open space account. If approved, the plan could add up to about $145,000 annually for Cohasset.

Hartshorne said he thinks it's possible for the town to adopt both plans. He said his reason for backing the Community Preservation Act is that it produces more money.

"Open land is not inexpensive these days," he said.

Armitage, his son helped negotiate the country's military base agreement deal with the Philippines, and was put in charge of water right negotiations in the Middle East.

Bloomfield Sr. was involved in the setting up of the United Nations, taught at MIT for 35 years, and served as Jimmy Carter's National Security Council Director of Global Issues.

When asked if he could be persuaded by his son to rejoin the international affairs game, Bloomfield Sr. said "I'm happy as a clam up here."

He said while in high school, Bloomfield Jr. was "an athlete not a jock," as a member of the school's tennis and baseball teams, played tuba in the school band, and was the student council president his senior year. "He was a normal kid...played in a rock band," said Bloomfield Sr.

As of now, Bush has only said he "intends to name" Bloomfield Jr. to the position, but has not yet done so formally.

Though his son is a Republican, Bloomfield Sr. said he considered the appointment to be merit-based. "He's a professional, and a foreign affairs and defense expert," he said. "I'm pleased that someone that good will be in a responsible position."

"This is meritocracy at work," he said.

Green Wave swamps Cohasset Skippers

Boys tourney run ended by Abington

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The upstart Cohasset Skippers, dismissed by many at the beginning of the season as also-rans in the South Shore League, exceeded virtually all expectations over the last three months, winning 14 games. Unfortunately, their Cinderella ride ended abruptly last Friday in a Sectional quarterfinal loss to the Green Wave of Abington.

"We originally thought that if we had gone .500 and made the tournament, it would have been a successful season," confessed 10th year coach Ron Ford.

After several consecutive dismal seasons, this team was thought to have been simply more of the same. But finishing up with a 14-8 record despite numerous players down due to illness or injury, Cohasset remained in contention for the league title into the last week of the season.

In the 72-51 loss, Cohasset's third this year to their SSL rivals from Abington, the Skippers started out matching their hosts shot for shot, even holding a seven point advantage at one point.

"It started the way we wanted it to," said Ford.

The veteran coach attributed much of his squad's early success to the unusually large Cohasset crowd on hand. CHS even offered a spectator bus for some of the student fans.

"I think we had more fans than they did," effused Ford, who added that he was incredibly impressed with the capacity crowd on hand for last Tuesday's preliminary round win over Foxboro.

Unfortunately for the Boys in Blue, the host Green Wave squad eventually found their shooting touch and surged in front during an 8-2 run at the end of the half. They took a 33-27 advantage into the intermission.

When both teams came back on the floor for round two, Abington busted out for a 16-3 run that blew the game open. During that span, Abington seemed to be hitting every shot thrown in the same vicinity as the hoop.

"They just shot the lights out," stated Ford plainly.

"We were getting good looks. We just weren't hitting them. It wasn't our night. . . but they played with character."
Cohasset coach Ron Ford

In fact, Abington's two South Shore League All-Stars— seniors Nick French, a former Cohasset resident, and James Smith— combined for 8-of-8 shooting from the floor in the second half. Smith tallied 21 points, while French finished the game with 15.

Cohasset never reduced the deficit blow 16 points, hardly surprising considering the team shot just 8-of-27 from the field in the second half.

"We were getting good looks," said Ford, shrugging. "We just weren't hitting them. It wasn't our night. . . but they played with character."

With a minute left in the game, Ford substituted his younger bench players for senior captains Erik Shea, TJ Bilodeau and Doug O'Brien for the last time. The trio received a lengthy standing ovation from the Cohasset faithful.

"Those three stack up as some of the best captains I have ever had," lauded Ford after the game.

Indeed the Skipper squad success story is in large part due to the motivation and leadership of Shea, Bilodeau and O'Brien. Shea and Bilodeau were selected to represent the schoolin the South Shore League All-Star game, and O'Brien, though he missed multiple games due to sickness, was once again among the most effective 'sixth men' on the South Shore.

Tournament Game Notes

Abington

-Cohasset shot 29 percent from the floor in the second half, but hit 50 percent of their three point attempts. Cohasset shot 41percent in the first half, but went 0-for-6 from long range after the break.

-For the second straight tournament game, a frontcourt underclassmen hit a shot as the buzzer sounded in the first half.

-Cohasset took three offensive fouls in the game, two by junior point guard Matt Bilodeau, and the other by O'Brien.

-Abington missed 6-of-14 foul shots in the game. Two were by 85% shooter French, and three were by senior captain Jason Harrington, "The Mule."

Foxboro

-The two teams combined to make their first six field goal attempts of the second half, then combined to miss their

With the wrestling and gymnastics seasons over, Doerr gym has been cleared out for the final time.

Doerr gym closes doors for last time

Site of so many Cohasset High glories to be converted into a library

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

"It has got history," said former varsity gymnastics coach Ruthann Ardizonni about the Doerr Gym of Cohasset, which will no longer be used as an athletic facility come next year.

The gymnasium, opened in the 50s as the premiere basketball court on the entire South Shore, certainly has more than its fair share of history. A host to basketball, wrestling and gymnastics over the past quarter century, Doerr Gym had no shortage of proud seasons.

Gracing the walls of the gymnasium are a large numbers of banners for the gymnastics team and countless names on the wall of wrestlers who were either Sectional Finalists or State Finalists.

"It is definitely intimidating to a school that doesn't have that type of history," offered 18th year Cohasset wrestling coach Torin Sweeney, who wrestled himself for Cohasset the first year the school had a team in 1977.

The namesake of the Doerr Gym was Everett "Evie" Doerr, a much beloved coach and physical education teacher for many years at Cohasset High School.

Ardizonni and Sweeney, with a combined 34 years of coaching experience at Cohasset, have shared the gym since the early 80s, and recalled some of their most cherished moments.

Ardizzoni started by saying that the first year Cohasset had a school gymnastics program, she was a freshman, but a captain for the squad in 1976.

The Skippers lost all their meets that year, forced to compete entirely on the road due to equipment shortages.

Heading into this season, Kristin Sheerin was inarguably one of the best female gymnasts ever to compete for the Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics team. Now, 3-1/2 months later, the Skippers' junior co-captain is arguably the best ever.

Sheerin takes on the best in Massachusetts on Saturday when she travels to Lincoln-Sudbury High for the State Individual Championships. The meet was a definite turning point in Sheerin's high school gymnastics career as the rest of the state couldn't help but take notice of her huge sixth-place finish.

Sheerin has always thrived on big-meet pressure for the simple fact she never feels as though there's a whole lot of pressure on her. If there is pressure on Sheerin, whether it be internal or external, she's not telling.

"It was very unexpected," Sheerin said of her sixth-place finish of a year ago. "I'm very happy. This has been a successful season. I'm seeded higher (ninth). Last year I was just a nobody. I'll be happy just to place."

By the time Saturday rolls around, it will have been more than three weeks since Sheerin last competed. That meet, the Pilgrim Conference 2 Championships, proved to be one for the ages. Sheerin locked up the only two Skippers' school records she didn't already own; the all-around and vault. Her 35.65 all-around mark was more than a point in front of Michelle Hartley's record and also good for first place. Sheerin won the vault with an 8.9, bettering Hartley's 1990 mark of 8.7. Along with the all-around and vault, Sheerin also holds the school record on the beam (9.15), floor (9.15) and bars (8.8), which she set at last year's State Individuals.

Much of Sheerin's success this season can be attributed to the fact that she was healthy for the duration. There was never the hint of a flu bug, which hit so many teams this winter. Sheerin didn't lose any training to injuries and only got stronger as the season wore on.

The degree of difficulty in Sheerin's routines rose, as did the consistency in which she nailed them cold. She believes the 8.9 vault in the Pilgrim Conference 2 meet was the result of a handspring next seven.

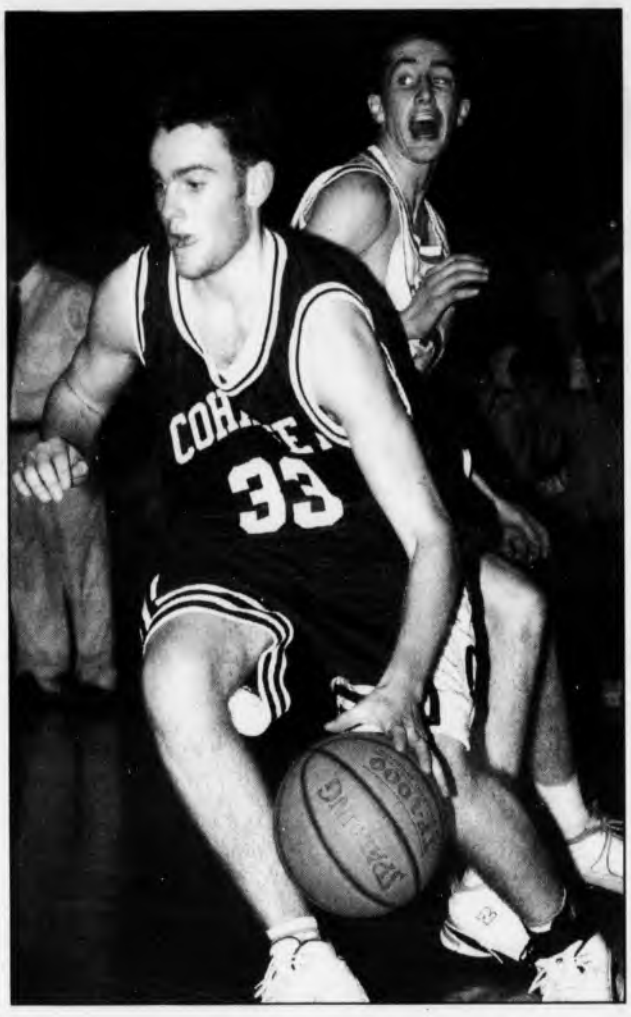
-Matt Bilodeau either scored or assisted on eight of Cohasset's first nine baskets to start the second half before being replaced by younger brother Chris with 6:24 left on the clock.

-Although he is a senior, Tim Callahan is in his first year as a player for Foxboro. Even the Foxboro folks couldn't explain why.

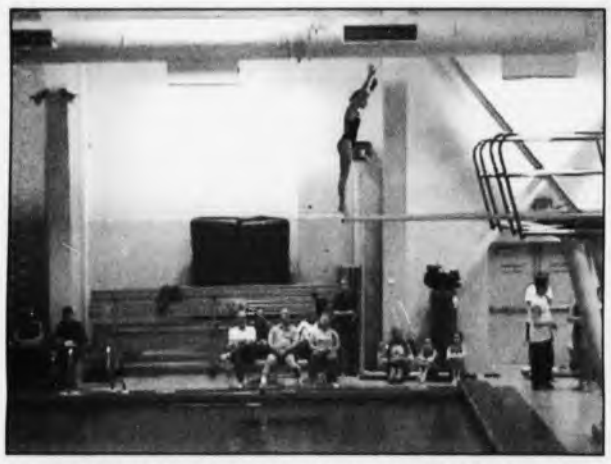


-This was only Cohasset's second win of the year when committing more turnovers than their opponents, losing this battle 12-11.

-Cohasset shot an unconscious 67% from the floor in the second half, including 75% from three range. And while paling in comparison, the home team managed to shoot an impressive 50% in the opening 16 minutes.

-Oddly enough, the Boston Globe and the Boston Herald picked Foxboro and Cohasset, respectively, to be the Sleeper in the Div. 3 South Sectionals.

-The Skippers improved to 4-1 when playing non-league opponents at home.



The Cohasset cheerleaders did everything they could think of to inspire the hoopsters on Friday night.

High Dive

Cohasset's Kelsey Bell, pictured here performing one of her dives from platform step 4 and then accepting her medal on the fourth place platform, placed fourth in the 3-meter springboard competition of the 2001 Junior Olympic Winter Regional Championships held in Ewing, NJ, this past Weekend, thus qualifying for the East Junior National Diving Championships to be held in Bloomington, Indiana at the end of April.

with 1-1/2 twists she had been working on. Sheerin had the move down pat and hit it perfectly.

"That was just what I needed to bring up my overall score," she said.

Sheerin has been training at her private gym in Braintree since the Pilgrim Conference competition and is itching to get back on the mats.

"Once I've been in a routine of two meets a week, (then gone three weeks without a meet) it hurts a little," she said. "But I'm ready. It'll be a lot of fun. There are going to be so many great gymnasts there."

Sheerin can't help but look ahead to the 2001-2002 season. Not only will she be working on putting her records out of reach for some years to come, but Sheerin has her conference title to defend. Then there's the six seniors who will be picked to represent Massachusetts in the national high school championships.

Sheerin fully intends to make a serious run at breaking into that elite six.

"I have a lot to look forward to next year," she said.

Doerr gym closes doors for last time

Amazingly, the program righted itself, and the Skippers captured the League Championships just one year later in 1977.

As a varsity coach from 1984 to 2000, and a Middle School coach this past season, Ardizzoni has seen her girls win two League Co-Championships, in the '93-'94 and '97-'98 seasons, and two League Championships in the '94-'95 and '95-96 seasons.

In addition to the superb team effort Aridizzoni has seen over the years, there has been a great number of standout individuals.

Since 1994, the South Shore League has selected the top 10 gymnasts in the league to represent their school in an All-Star competition.

The Skippers have sent two competitors three times, three All-Stars twice, four participants twice, and, in 1995, sent a whopping five, or half the All-Star team.

Erica and Tara Hettstrom and Jody Calwell dominated the mid-90s with four All-Star performances each. Kristin Sheerin, currently a junior at Cohasset High School, should make the team again next year for her unprecedented sixth selection, as she has made the team every year since seventh grade.

In fact, over the course of her career, Sheerin has broken every Doerr Gym record, including a 9.15 on the beam and a 9.2 on the floor, and a 35.65 in the All-around.

The team record for a meet is 127.15, but Ardizzoni hardly thinks that not having their home arena will stop the progress of the program.

"I am sure [new coach] Cara Connerty and her crew will break it next year," predicted Ardizzoni, who was a captain for the Skippers all four years she was at Cohasset High School.

"Wherever the Lady Skippers find a home next year, their chances look good with three returning All-Stars in Sheerin, junior Carlie Carter and sophomore Meredith Bixby.

Sweeney also had a great deal to say when asked to pinpoint some of the great feats he had seen over the last 25 years, both as a competitor and a coach.

Sweeney began to wrestle for the varsity Skippers as an 8th grader, modestly adding he was only on the roster that young due a shortage of participants.

Sweeney suffered a few losing seasons to start off his coaching career. The turning point of his coaching career came with a win over the juggernaut Marshfield team in 1986.

"That was a match that let the South Shore know we had made it to the top," recalled Sweeney. "That would have been our first winning season as a program."

Two years later, Sweeney felt a similar feeling when his Skippers handed State Champions Weston their only loss of the season.

Later that same year, Cohasset was in contention for the league title, hosting Rockland in the final meet of the season to decide the South Shore League crown. Rockland did come out victorious, thanks in large part to a now outdated rule that the home team had to declare their wrestlers first, giving Rockland a distinct advantage.

By utilizing this rule, the Bulldogs were able to avoid pitting their top wrestler against Skipper superstar Glen Freeman. This was one of the cases cited when league officials voted to eliminate the rule the following year.

Glen Freeman led a host of Freemans, as well as many other almost legendary wrestlers whose names are proudly displayed on the walls of Doerr Gym.

John, Glenn, Chris and Paul were virtually unstoppable in the late 80's, helping Sweeney and Cohasset to five consecutive winning seasons.

In the 1992-'93 and '93-'94 seasons, Cohasset was led by rising stars Ray Jones, Steve Herrington and Nate Fiore, leading to a combined six sectional final appearances.

Cohasset solidified itself as one of the premiere wrestling programs in the area with wins that year over such Division One powerhouses as Weymouth and BC High, leading to some pretty heated rivalries.

Even now, Cohasset is still the envy of many schools in Massachusetts, having strung together seven straight seasons with at least 10 wins.

Part of the success for both the gymnastics and wrestling teams was due to the great competitive atmosphere of Doerr Gym. A relatively small facility, compared to some others across the state, Doerr Gym has a way of packing in more fans than seemingly possible.

"When we drew great crowds, it was intimidating for the other teams," said Sweeney.

The gym was so raucous at times that Ardizzoni felt that even her own team members would be nervous to face the crowd.

"When we were doing gymnastics, the place was packed," asserted Ardizzoni. She added, jokingly: "Just imagine walking out in a leotard. The fans were real supportive even though you were real nervous."

So many years, so much history. The landmark of CHS will be used as a temporary library and art room during all of the construction at the school once the gymnastics and wrestling programs are gone.

Gone, but obviously far from forgotten.

Speakers' workshop at conservatory March 17

"According to recent studies," said South Shore Conservatory Drama Instructor Ellen Kelly, "fear of public speaking is among the top three most common fears, with the other two being fear of flying and fear of death."

Starting with the idea that all the world is indeed a stage, Kelly has expanded the Conservatory's theatre program with "Speak Up, Speak Out, Speak for Yourself!", an introductory speech skills workshop designed to help everyday people play their everyday roles in life by putting them at ease when speaking. Kelly said she scheduled the workshop at the Conservatory's Hingham campus on March 17, from 3 to 6 p.m.

Ellen Kelly

By applying some of the techniques actors use to prepare themselves for performance, anyone can become more relaxed at speaking, whether one-on-one, in a small group, or before an audience. Kelly will teach these techniques in the workshop, then work with games and exercises intended to put participants at ease and help them have fun while learning the basics of the art of communication. A packet of informational materials and recommended reading will be available to take home.

Workshop participants are asked to dress comfortably, and to bring a notebook and pencil. Pre-registration is required. To register, or for details, phone South Shore Conservatory's Hingham office, 781-749-7565 x 10.

Music festival at St. Stephen's

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, now in its tenth year, St. Stephen's Church is presenting a Festival of the Music of Josef Gabriel Rheinberger on Sunday, March 11, at 3 p.m.

Rheinberger (1839-1901) was born in Liechtenstein and taught and composed in Munich. At a time when church music had not much integrity, this composer shone like in a beacon, with a tremendous output of choral, organ, and instrumental music.

At the festival, organists John Whiteside and Fredrick Guzasky will play organ works of the composer, and Dr. Whiteside will conduct the Cantate Domino Chorale in Rheinberger's "Mass in E major." Dr. Guzasky will present reflections and anecdotes from the composer's life, Taras Leschishin will perform the "Six Baritone Songs," and there will even be a sing along of a Rheinberger Kyrie.

St. Stephen's is located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset, is handicap accessible, and has available parking in the nearby village car park. There will be a playing of the 58 bell carillon a half hour before the concert by Sally Slade Warner and a reception will follow the festival. The concert is free of charge, but donations will be accepted. For information, please call (781) 383-1083.

Achieving 'Zen' through art

Japanese artist Kaji Aso brings his style to South Shore Art Center

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

His name can be translated as "flower child."

He believes art and philosophy are one in the same.

Japanese artist Kaji Aso, 65, is presenting his unique brand of art work to the public in a show called "Beginner Mind: Zen and the Art of Kaji Aso" at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset.

"Philosophy and art go hand in hand," said Japanese artist Kaji Aso, whose work is currently on display through April 15 at the South shore Art Center in Cohasset. "Art itself is a philosophy." His show, titled "Beginner Mind: Zen and the Art of Kaji Aso, center features about 22 of his paintings, all of which he said incorporate the "Zen" philosophy. Aso will also be featuring other forms of his work, including prints, some of his poetry, and even a "Zen is a sect of Buddhism," Aso said. "While many other religions talk about life after death, that never really comes up with Zen. Zen is about realizing the paradise in one's lifetime and accentuating the value of one's life. Beauty is a very important aspect of Zen, one which I incorporate into my art."

> "Zen is about realizing the paradise in one's lifetime and accentuating the value of one's life. Beauty is a very important aspect of Zen, one which I incorporate into my art."
> -Artist Kaji Aso

Aso's resume is quite impressive. He retired last year from his job as a professor at the school of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston where he worked since 1967. Now manages his own institution, Kaji Aso Studio in Boston, on a full-time basis. He founded the studio in 1972.

Friday night's opening reception drew a crowd, some of whom you can see reflected in Kaji Aso's painting "Night Visitor." Aso's show will run through April 15.

Aso said going on adventures is part of the Zen aspect of his life, something which started to develop at an early age when he lived in Tokyo. Aso said the talents which Aso has today started to form when he was only 13 years old.

"That's when I started painting, but really, I've been drawing since I could pick up a pencil," Aso said.

While painting and drawing gave him joy when he was young, Aso noted he also survived some of the horrors of World War II, including running from fighter planes in Tokyo, and withstanding the bombing of neighboring Hiroshima.

> "When I can see life on the canvas, I'm very happy."
> -Artist Kaji Aso

"My war experience as a young boy opened my eyes," he said. "It was quite real."

In 1967, Aso left Japan and came straight to America and settled in Boston. He said he always wanted to travel to other countries, but it was the United States which lured him more than any other.

"Somehow, I was caught by the passion of the young people of this country at the time," he said, noting the demonstrations against the Vietnam War were at their height when he first arrived.

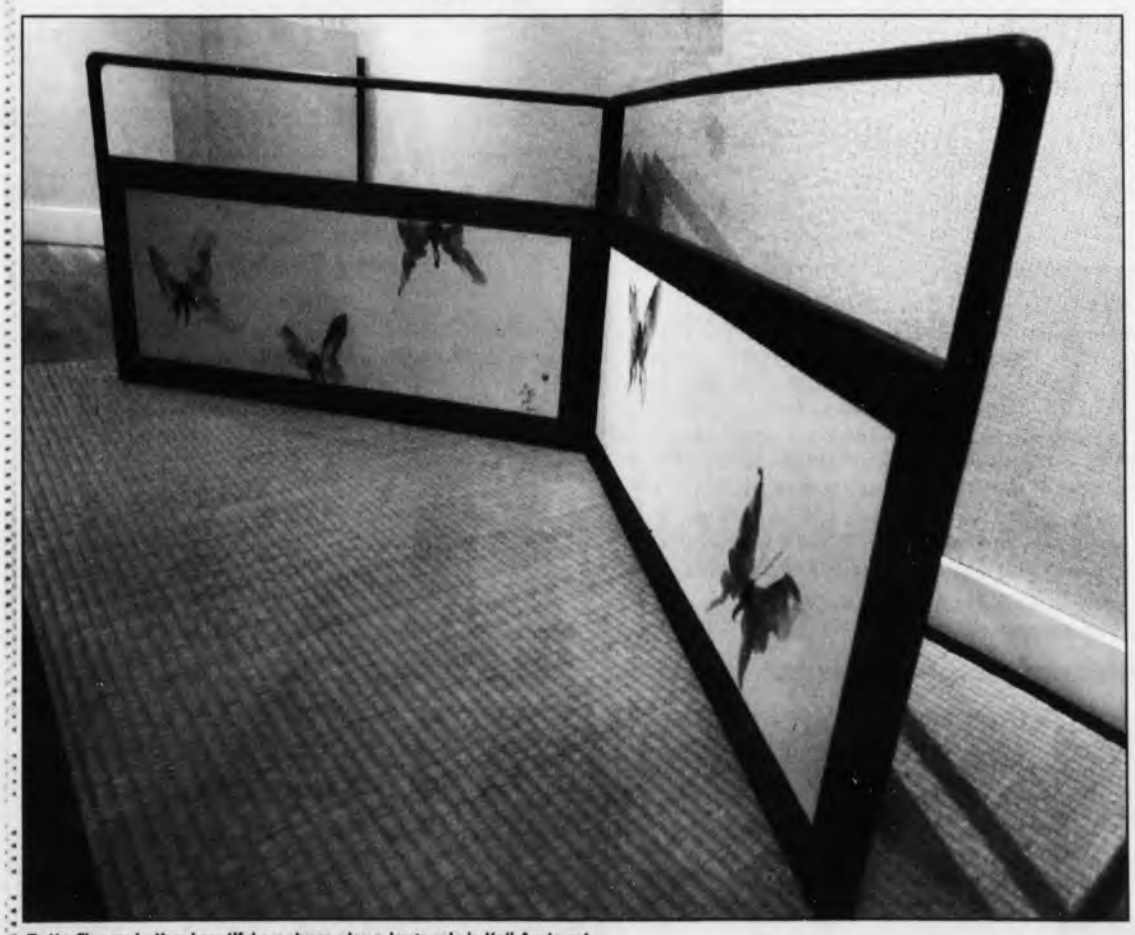
Some Americans asked Aso why he chose America, given the tension in World War II.

"I never had a vengeful mind," he explained.

Aso managed to land a job as a professor in the late '60s and a few years later, he opened his studio where he taught classes, displayed art, read poetry, and even performed tea ceremonies. He still does all those things today.

"The tea ceremonies are about enjoyment of life," he said. "It's about being together with other people, looking at art, and having conversations. It's a form of a party." Aso said he always prepares a poem for every tea ceremony he conducts every Sunday afternoon at the studio.

Aso said he is enthusiastic about showing his work at the South Shore Art Center.



"I love the location," he said, "and I always enjoy it when different people see my work."

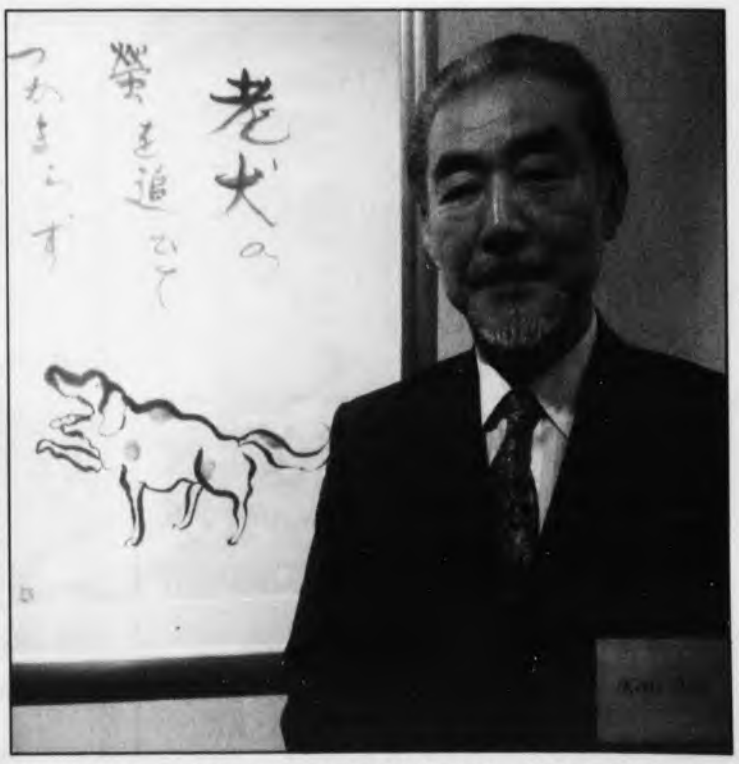
Aso said he displays his art frequently at Kaji Aso Studio, and he also "has shows constantly in Japan." He said on May 2, he will be hosting a "festival of Japanese images" at the studio.

Aso said although he believes art and philosophy are intertwined, he has a very straightforward view of what he thinks makes a good piece of art.

"When I can see life on the canvas, I'm very happy," he said.

For questions about Kaji Aso's exhibit at the South Shore Art Center, call (781) 383-2787. For more information on Kaji Aso Studio, call (617) 247-1719.

Butterflies and other beautiful creatures play a large role in Kaji Aso's art.



Over the years, Aso has managed to win numerous honors including the "500 Leaders of Influence" award from the American Biographical Institute, and also has been hailed as one of the "2000 Outstanding People of the 20th Century" by the International Biographical Centre in England.

Aso has also illustrated a number of publications, written articles and books of poems, and furthermore, his art work has been featured at some of the most prestigious galleries in the United States, in Europe, and in his native homeland of Japan.

In addition to enjoying art and writing poems, Aso also has a few other talents.

"I'm an opera singer, a philosopher, a calligrapher, and a poet, but besides that, I also like being adventurous," he said.

Aso explained he has led a number of expeditions through various waterways, including taking groups of artists down the Tagus River on the Iberian Peninsula in 1997, and down the Nile River from Sudan to Egypt in 1993. He also traveled the entire length of the Mississippi River, which has an approximate span of 2,800 miles. Aso has covered rivers in America, in Europe, and also in Japan.

Improving tomato soup

If your childhood memories include Ed Sullivan, Haley Mills, and Fred MacMurray,

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

you probably associate tomato soup with Campbell's. Since many of us at Cook's Illustrated had fond memories of this ubiquitous product, we recently tasted it alongside a variety of homemade tomato soups. I am saddened to report that Campbell's was judged as bland, hardly worth the effort of opening the can, while the other recipes were, to my surprise, also lackluster. I wanted big tomato flavor with complexity, a soup that could be eaten on its own without a sandwich to make it interesting. I also wanted a recipe that could be made in the dead of winter with canned, not fresh, tomatoes.

In the December 1999 issue of Cook's Illustrated, we published an excellent recipe for cream of tomato soup. The trick was roasting canned tomatoes with a sprinkling of brown sugar. Still, as good as it was, I was searching for a pairing of flavors that would give the soup a more complex flavor profile. The solution? Well, since I had to roast tomatoes in a hot oven, I decided to roast a red pepper as well, which gave the soup a wonderful smoky flavor and sweetness without having to add hardly any sugar.

The technique was simple enough. I used a very hot oven (500 degrees), lined a jelly roll pan with foil, and roasted the peppers skin-side down after cutting them into 1-inch strips. When the skin was black and had blistered (which takes fewer than 15 minutes), I removed the peppers from the oven and folded up the foil to let them steam in their own heat. (This facilitates removal of the dark, bitter skins.) I then roasted the tomatoes in a similar manner, which took only 20 minutes.

Wanting still more flavor, I added onion to the recipe, sautéing it till softened but not browned, along with a garlic clove. All of the above ingredients were then simmered in tomato juice and chicken stock for about 20 minutes. To add a bit of contrast I decided to add a herbaceous accent to the soup. After some experimentation, I settled on a garnish of simple pesto made from basil leaves, olive oil, and salt.

ROASTED TOMATO/RED PEPPER SOUP

This recipe is best made with canned tomatoes, which have more flavor than most fresh tomatoes you will find in the supermarket.

1 red bell pepper, seeded and cut into 1-inch strips
2 tablespoons olive oil
2 cans (28 ounces each) whole tomatoes, not packed in puree, drained and seeded
3 cups of liquid reserved
1 medium onion cut into 1/2-inch dice, about 1 1/2 cups
1 clove garlic, finely chopped or pressed through garlic press
1 1/2 cups chicken broth
1/2 teaspoon sugar
1 tablespoon finely chopped marjoram or tarragon
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

1. Heat oven to 500 degrees and adjust a rack to the upper-middle position. Line a jelly roll pan or rimmed cookie sheet with foil (heavy-duty is best). Toss pepper with 1 tablespoon olive oil and place the strips on pan skin-side down. Roast in the oven for 12 to 14 minutes or until they have softened and large black blisters appear on the skin side. Remove from the oven and carefully pull the ends of the foil up and around the peppers to make a closed package. Transfer the package to a plate and allow to cool. Once again line the pan with foil. Spread the tomatoes in a single layer. Roast for about 20 minutes, or until the liquid has evaporated and the tomatoes have started to brown (this will tend to be on the side in contact with the pan rather than the top).

2. Heat the remaining tablespoon of olive oil in a heavy nonreactive saucepan over medium heat. Add the onion and stir to coat with the oil. Reduce the heat to low and cook, covered, for about 10 to 12 minutes, stirring occasionally, or until the onions are soft. Add the garlic and cook for an additional 2 minutes. Add the prepared tomatoes, pepper, reserved tomato juice, chicken stock, and sugar and cover; increase the heat and bring to a boil. Reduce heat to low and simmer, covered, for 20 minutes. Add the marjoram and cook for an additional 5 minutes. Season to taste with salt and freshly ground pepper and serve immediately, adding a healthy dollop of Rough Pesto (recipe follows) to each portion.

Serves 4 to 6

ROUGH PESTO

This "pesto" contains no pine nuts or Parmesan to dull the flavor of the basil.

2 cups tightly packed basil leaves
6 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
1/8 teaspoon salt or to taste

Using a food processor or mortar and pestle crush the basil, oil and salt to form a rough paste.

THURSDAY, MARCH 8

The final windup to this month's full moon begins at 5:44 a.m., when the moon enters Virgo. Stress management is important. Avoid getting caught up in negative thinking, worrying. Instead, tackle jobs that require physical labor and exertion. You can be most productive. At 8:07 p.m. the planet Venus begins retrograde travel until April 20. Get back on track with exercise routines, self-improvement programs. This is not a favorable period for making major financial investments or long-term commitments to others. On the other hand, it brings a time to reflect, reorient, refocus; redress the balance in personal or professional relationships that have become too one-sided for comfort.

FRIDAY, MARCH 9

Wake up in a good mood. Look for the positives in all situations. Others may be critical, impatient, difficult to please. The full moon culminates at 12:23 p.m., 19-degrees of Virgo/Pisces. An applying alignment of Mercury/Uranus prompts you to keep an open mind. This influence is ideal for brainstorming, trouble-shooting. You may experience a sudden flash of insight, a breakthrough in understanding, a new discovery.

SATURDAY, MARCH 10

At 5:47 a.m. the moon enters the sign Libra, traveling there throughout the weekend and bringing a focus on key relationships. Because Libra's ruling planet, Venus, travels in retrograde, it is not a favorable time for starting new partnerships. Rather, it's a time to strengthen the ties in existing relationships. Open the doors to a higher level of communication; work on a compromise that will satisfy both parties. Love is the name of the game this evening. Plan a romantic dinner for two.

SUNDAY, MARCH 11

Yesterday's advice applies to today. The Libra moon forms contacts to five planets until 9:44 p.m., when it becomes inactive. This is a wonderful day for socializing. Plan to visit or entertain friends. Go with your creative side; arts and crafts projects also get the green light.

MONDAY, MARCH 12

There are a number of challenging planetary alignments this week. A Scorpio moon arrives at 7:42 a.m, and a lunar alignment to Neptune is in effect until 10:21 a.m. It may take a while for the morning fog to burn off. Pay extra attention to the little things. Pluto, the planetary ruler of Scorpio, is slowing its rate of motion, preparing for retrograde travel Friday, March 17. That means that this is a time for cleaning out, letting go. Take extra time out for yourself this week; for prayer, meditation, inner reflection. You can gain significant and useful insights.

TUESDAY, MARCH 13

Yesterday's planetary influences affect today as well. The moon continues active travel in Scorpio. A challenging 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Saturn culminates at 5:30 p.m. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. Signing contracts or launching ventures are off limits. Instead, stay busy with matters that have been left hanging and finish them; make repairs, clean out and reorganize. Don't get caught up in negative thinking or power struggles with others. Keep it light. Focus on the positives.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 14

Wake up in a good mood. The Scorpio moon forms stressful contacts to Saturn and Mercury until 7:17 a.m., when it becomes inactive. Make up a list of things to do; tackle routine chores, errands, unfinished business. Get rid of the clutter. A Sagittarius moon arrives at 1:16 p.m., bringing a lighter, brighter mood. However, a lunar opposition to Jupiter this evening warns against going to extremes or bingeing out on any level. Maintain a balance.

Late winter pruning

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler

PART 1

A light dusting of shimmering snow covers the ground on this gray morning in early March. A major nor'easter is headed our way, threatening to bury the emerging foliage of our springtime bulbs and perennials for weeks to come as March lives up to its reputation for "coming in like a lion." Gusty winds and drifting snow are likely to damage trees and shrubs and scatter debris, reminders of a winter season reluctant to release its grip. For the moment, spring seems light years away.

Should the prediction for a foot or more of snow come to pass, it may be some time before we can tend to our gardens, but this is the ideal time to prune many deciduous trees and shrubs. The very word, pruning, is capable of striking fear in the heart of even a seasoned gardener. Learning to prune effectively is much like becoming an amateur hair stylist. A poor pruning job is analogous to giving a bad haircut. Barring the infiltration of disease, the tree or shrub will nearly always recover, re-grow, and be ready for another trim later in the season or the following year allowing for correction of any gross mistakes.

Pruning is the selective removal of specific plant parts for a purpose. Nearly all shrubs and trees benefit from a routine pruning to train, develop, revitalize or retrain overgrown plants to keep them in scale with their surroundings. Good pruning techniques also improve the health of most plants by promoting air circulation and allowing light to reach the interior of an otherwise densely branched tree or shrub. Creative pruning may also enhance the beauty of many plants, as in the case of topiary or hedges.

Mid-February to mid-April is a preferred time of year to prune dormant plants since it is considerably easier to view their architecture and observe damaged, diseased or crossed branches. Winter storms often cause injury to woody plants leaving jagged cuts which may collect water and can potentially lead to disease. Partially broken limbs may eventually lead to the bark being stripped beneath the tear. Damaged or diseased stems and limbs should be pruned as soon as they are noticed to prevent the spread of infections. Dead limbs can be removed at any time throughout the year. Should you observe crossed branches, lop off at least one of the branches as the constant rubbing of one branch against another is an open invitation for disease to penetrate damaged bark.

The timing of pruning will determine a plant's response to the process. Plants produce food reserves at season's end to help them survive the winter months and to initiate growth in spring. Reducing the number of branches and buds in late winter leaves more energy for the remaining shoots and promotes especially vigorous growth in spring. One drawback to pruning early bloomers at this time of year is the removal of some of this season's flowers but the ultimate rewards are worth a few less blossoms. Bring the pruned branches of forsythia, crabapples, dogwoods and other early-flowering shrubs indoors to force into early bloom. If you do not wish to sacrifice those lovely blossoms, prune spring bloomers after they finish flowering. Members of the cherry family, including peaches, plums and cherries, are particularly susceptible to disease and tend to be best pruned while they are in bloom.

Summer and fall blooming trees and shrubs such as butterfly bushes (Buddleia), blue mist shrub (Caryopteris), sweet pepper bush (Clethra) and Rose-of-Sharon, should be pruned before new growth appears. Even very large butterfly bushes should be cut back to 12 to 18 inches tall. This ruthless pruning will promote glorious quantities of fragrant blooms later in the summer.

Red- and yellow-twigged dogwood bushes should be drastically pruned as the leaf buds swell and may even be cut completely down to the ground to promote vigorous, new, brightly-colored stems. Similar renewal pruning should be exercised on forsythia bushes and lilacs immediately after flowering. Lop old, thick, woody canes right to the ground to encourage young, healthy shoots to emerge. Another candidate for severe spring pruning is hydrangea "Annabelle" which, when pruned to the ground, produces spectacular, massive white trusses beginning in July.

Plants which are prone to heavy sap production, including birches, maples or grapes, bleed profusely if pruned in spring as the leaf buds are swelling. Although the running sap will not actually harm the tree or vine, this bleeding can be most disconcerting. Late winter pruning, while the plant is still fully dormant, or spring pruning after new growth begins, will minimize this condition. Acquire a good reference book on pruning or attend a pruning demonstration by our local county extension service to learn proper pruning techniques. I often refer to "The Pruning Book" by Lee Reich, to refresh my memory on when and how to prune but practice and experience tend to be the best means of becoming a skilled pruner.

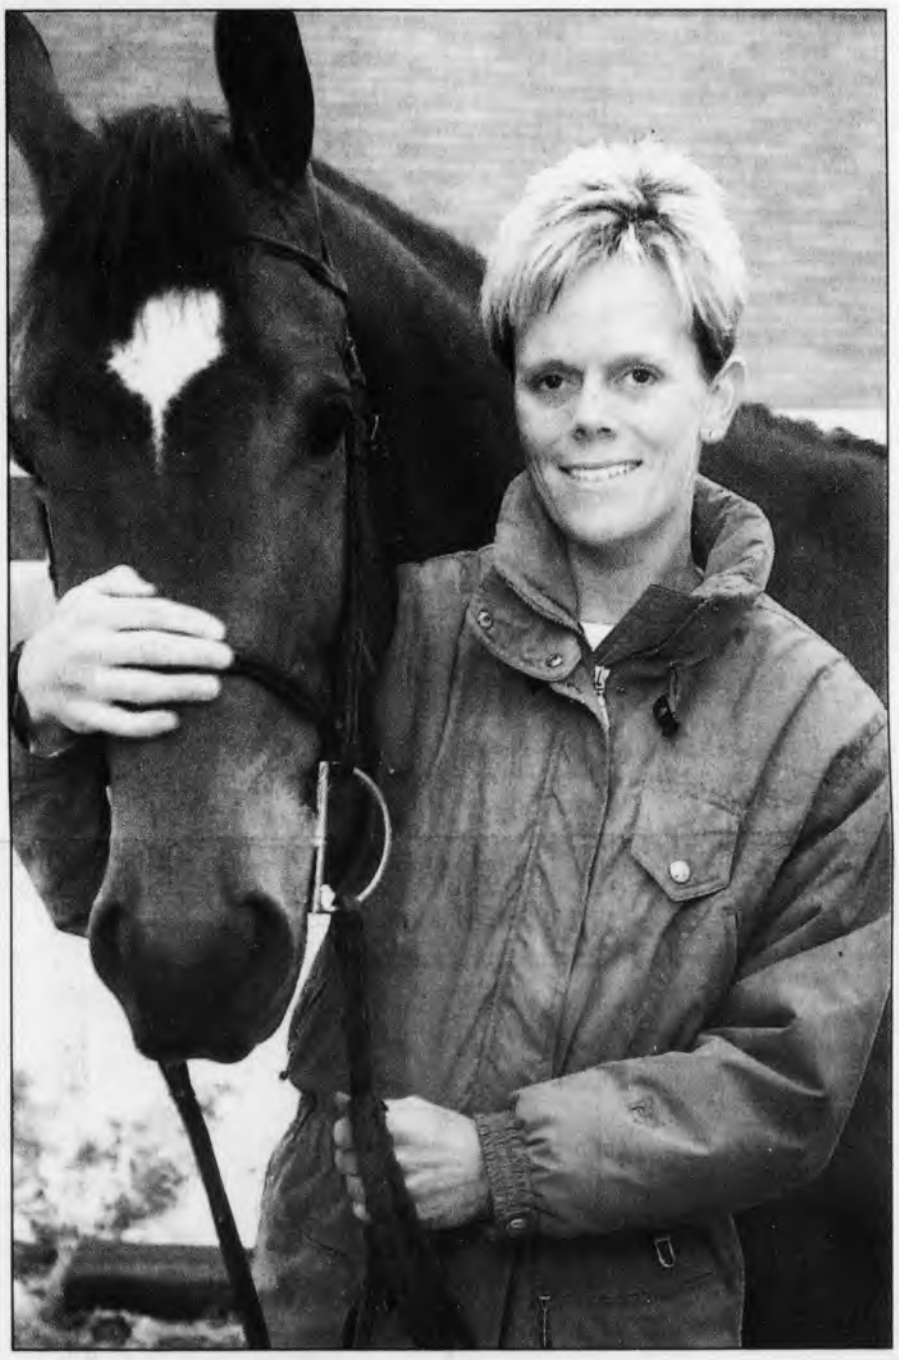
Land swap possible part of train deal

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The state could be willing to throw in a possible "land swap" as part of its payment for the town-owned, railroad right-of-way to coax the town into signing a Greenbush mitigation deal.

State Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan said he would be willing to discuss giving the town the former Mass. Highway property off Crocker Lane or help the town buy another piece of open space, said state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth. Hedlund said Sullivan made the offer during a recent informal meeting with the senator.



One potential selling point about the Crocker Lane property off Rte. 3A is that the state would keep all environmental responsibility for the site. The site, which could be contaminated, used to be a shop for Mass. Highway trucks in the area.

The town and MBTA had originally agreed on a $1 million payment for the six-mile rail bed, but that agreement was negotiated with the understanding the MBTA had legal authorization to take the land by eminent domain at no cost. However, Sec. Sullivan has since said that wasn't the case, and that the MBTA will have to pay fair market value for land. What that amount is remains to be debated, however, the town has said — because of its importance to town residents as a recreational area — it would seek $2.6 million for the right-of-way.

The MBTA is anxious to ink agreements with the various Top equestrienne teaches her sport

By Jim Logan
CORRESPONDENT

The lucky ones in life they say, are those who are able to take their love for something and turn it into their "job."

Cohasset native and professional equestrienne Abby Adams Greer is one such "lucky" person. Greer, who took the passion she had for horses since her first gallop at the tender age of eight and rode with it, is now both an accomplished and nationally acclaimed equestrienne, as well as business partner at the River Wind Farm in Pembroke (the same hunter/jumper barn where she got her start years ago).

"It's nice to see all their hard work come together, and for them to leave a show with a ribbon for their efforts. It's very rewarding."
— Abby Adams Greer

Greer is glad she made the world of horses a full-time endeavor.

"I love it," says Greer, talking about not only her many personal achievements as an award-winning rider on the national hose-showing circuit, but also her teaching duties with the scores of students she instructs from all over the South Shore area at the River Wind. "Both riding [myself] and teaching is just a lot of fun for me. I really enjoy what I do."

On the personal side of things, Greer has earned numerous acco-

Town waits for tide-gate answer

Reeds taking over the salt marsh

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

After months of studying water and salinity levels in James Meadow, the Army Corps of Engineers has decided two more months of studying are needed.

Cohasset officials are waiting for word from the Corps about whether they have to revisit the James Brook tide gate installation project. The question at hand is: do the flapper-style tide gates installed two years ago allow enough saltwater into the James Meadow to allow the salt-marsh to come back?

"A salt marsh needs salt water," said Ed Reiner, a salt-marsh expert with the EPA. "What happens when you cut off the flow of salt water, phragmites takes over."

A good portion of the marsh sports phragmites — common reeds — which can cause a problem in floodplain salt-marshes, such as James Meadow. The Corps, along with the federal Environmental Protection Agency, wants Cohasset to undergo a salt-march restoration project.

Though phragmites might look harmless, Reiner said they can have a multi-fold negative impact on the environment and could create an

Oh, what a shim!

Interior support slips, weakening pole

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The support inside the 80-foot Town Common flagpole near the door to the halyard broke loose and slipped down during last week's storm, said Nancy St. John of Eagle Flag Company that supplied the pole.

"The shim (a device inside the pole) lends support to that area that would otherwise be a weak spot in the pole," she said. "It broke free and when it did it left the area subject to the wind."

The fiberglass pole should be able to sustain winds of up to 120 miles per hour, according to the company brochure, far more than the 45 mph gusts in last week's nor'easter. The pole broke off about four feet above the base last Tuesday, struck some wires on the way down sending an electrical surge that flickered lights in the village, and broke again. No one was injured in the mishap.

PLP Composite Technologies of New Hampshire that manufactured the pole has never had a break like that, said St. John, who sent photographs to the manufacturer who might still make a site visit.

A four-foot section of the pole remains above the base. The rest of the broken pole is being housed at the Department of Public Works garage.

St. John, a Cohasset resident, said the four-year-old pole that is under warranty would be replaced at no charge to the town. She did not have a timeframe.

"The manufacturer will take a look at the reinforcement to make sure this does not happen again," she said.

Building inspector Robert Egan said as soon as the snow clears, the remaining section of the pole will be removed from the base.

"As soon as we can, we're going to yank out what's left," he said.

Lobster Lab gets warning

Must start building by fall

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Time is running out for Kevin Ulmer and his Cohasset Lobster Lab.

Tuesday night, Ulmer was given until Oct. 1 to raise $326,000 and start construction work on the town-owned Hagerty House on Parker Avenue, or have his lease terminated.

The lab is entering its third year of occupancy in the former Cohasset Colonials office and showroom, and the project's critics say the project is all but dead.

"Nothing has changed in three years," said Selectman Michael Sullivan, who has been opposed to Ulmer's plan to create a student-oriented marine research lab there since he first proposed it in 1996.

Ulmer met before the board this week as part of its annual lease renewal and update. Referring to Ulmer's annual finance report, Sullivan said, "There's the same amount of money in here as there was three years ago."

Ulmer defended his project saying by saying he told the board when he signed the $1-per-year lease that the lab would take four years to raise the necessary funds and get the program up and running. That's as long as it took the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation to raise money and renovate the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island. He also said he had a number of financial commitments for the lab, but he wasn't going to call in those donations until he was ready to break ground.

"It all seems very, very vague. We've seen nothing in writing."
— Selectman Michael Sullivan

However selectmen questioned how firm these commitments were, and asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to check into them.

"It all seems very, very vague," said Sullivan. "We've seen nothing in writing."

Middle-high school project bids are under estimates

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Town officials are smiling after receiving three bids for the middle-high school renovation and expansion project under the estimated $25 million price tag.

"We're ecstatic," Town Manager Mark Haddad said about the low-bids. "We're so happy about that."

Haddad called the bidding to perform the construction "very competitive" because all seven bids received were within $3 million of each other.

TLT Construction submitted the low bid of $23.4 million; followed by Neponset Valley Contractors' $24.4 million bid; and a $24.8 million bid by Eastern Contractors Incorporated. John T. Callahan Construction, which built the new Osgood School, submitted the high bid of $25.6 million.

Haddad and School Building Committee Chairman Rob Spofford gave credit to the project's architects Strekalovsky & Hoit for correctly estimating the project's cost. The bid opening, which was attended by representatives from each of the seven companies that submitted bids. Also on hand were Cohasset School Department Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey, Selectman Merle Brown, and architect Roger Hoit, and building committee members JoAnne Chittick, Denise Parker, Donna O'Donnell and David Chase.

With the bids open, Haddad said the committee will check the contractors' references, look at its rating with state and make sure it is bonded to do this type of work.

"We really need to do our homework on the references," Haddad said. "This is a major project for the town."

> "We're ecstatic."
> — Town Manager Mark Haddad

The committee is scheduled to meet March 21, and could make a decision that night. Final bids for the Deer Hill project will be opened earlier in the day.

Though the town is pleased with the way bidding went for both the project's general contract and sub-contract, they're not as rosy about the Deer Hill project.

Haddad, who spent more than an hour opening up sub-contract bid last Friday, said the bids came in a bit higher than expected.

"It went not as well [as the middle-high school bids]," Haddad said Monday.

Haddad hopes to have both the contractor and final cost on hand for the March 31 Annual Town Meeting. Selectmen have placed an article on the warrant that would seek additional funds for the project, if needed.

The project, which will see an expansion and complete renovation of both the Deer Hill and middle-high schools is expected to cost $41 million. The town authorized the project during Town Meeting last year, and in a subsequent vote at the annual town election last spring.

School committee rules on policy and budget

But no longer hires and fires

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Pat Martin

Mark DeGiacomo

Adrienne MacCarthy

For the first time in years, there will be a race for the school committee.

Come April 7, Cohasset voters can choose among three candidates for the two school committee seats as part of the annual Town Election. Incumbents Mark DeGiacomo, and chairman Pat Martin face a challenge from Deer Hill PSO and School Building Committee member Adrienne McCarthy for a three-year term on the five member committee.

Not only has it been a while since the last race for school committee – in 1998, a three-way race for two open seats involving Martin, DeGiacomo and Hugh Gorman – but it's also the first time an incumbent has run for reelection since 1994.

—NEWS ANALYSIS—

Now eight years into education reform, the role of the school committee is well understood: set school policy and create a departmental budget each year. And, if needed, the school committee also has the ability to hire and fire a superintendent.

But it wasn't always that way. Until the legislature passed the Education Reform Act in 1993, a town's school committee had essentially unlimited power over the day-to-day operation of the school system.

"It took the politics out of the schools," said former, long-time school committee member Ralph Kidder.

In the early 1990's, the state embarked on a massive retooling of the state's educational system. A recession coupled with inequality in school funding methods, left many city school systems in shambles, such as Boston, Brockton, and Springfield. "Boston went through four superintendents in nine years," Kidder recalled.

The reform act upped the amount of aid money the state doled out, but booted the school committee out of the classrooms, increased parent/principal control of the schools, and sought accountability in the form of a state-wide curriculum test (MCAS).

Kidder, who served from 1989-1998, served on the board both before and after education reform went into effect.

"It came in at the beginning of my second term," he said. "In Cohasset it wasn't much of a problem. The real problem was in urban school districts.

"Prior to education reform, the school committee hired everybody if they chose. There was patronage, and there was school committee meddling," Kidder said. "Imagine having a business where the CEO, in this case the superintendent, needs to hire a management team and can't. We got out of the business of hiring."

Kidder, now the chief financial officer and vice-president of administration at Massasoit Community College, said the Cohasset School Committee was actually in favor of education reform, and really didn't have a problem adjusting to its new rules, such as limitations on hiring.

"There was a lot of grief [amongst other school committees about the reform legislation] but our school committee recognized the benefits of what it was attempting to do," he said. "And we'd been working with our superintendent (Stephen Hart) like that anyway."

One of the beneficial characteristics of the school committee in Cohasset, Kidder reasoned, was that unlike in major cities, board members weren't using their seat as a springboard into higher political office.

"It's a good system and it's very small," he said. "People who run for school committee aren't interested in politics. Their background is in education or business. We don't have the people using the school committee for political advancement."

So the only issues Kidder had with education reform were the financial formula for aid distribution and high stakes testing. "It was inevitable that it was the suburban schools that would get whacked," he said about the aid distribution formula. "The way it was set up, the majority of the money went to places like Chelsea and Holyoke and Springfield. The Cohasset school system received $25 per student."

He added that high stakes testing such as MCAS depended on whether the district could get teachers retrained fast enough to teach the new curriculums.

In the end Kidder said, Cohasset came through reform immediately in good shape. "Frankly in the four years I was on the committee [following ed reform] it wasn't a problem," he said.

Today's current members would agree that Cohasset wasn't hurt by education reform, though the school committee may not be as strong as it once was.

It was Kidder and the rest of the school committee that hired current Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey in 1998, but it was Malvey who hired new middle/high school principal Dr. Michael Jones.

"The power of the school committee has clearly been weakened," said DeGiacomo, who was elected to the board in 1998, the year Kidder left. "But one of the many goals [of education reform] was to give the principals and superintendent more power to run the schools...We hire the superintendent and that's about it."

Both DeGiacomo and Martin said education reform left the "on-site management" of the schools up to principals, and also the parents with the mandatory creation of school councils. "Parents have a much more active role in the schools and I imagine that's a positive change," Martin said.

She added that by taking the school committee out of the day-to-day decision making of the school department, it "puts the expertise with who it should be."

DeGiacomo said he has no problem with the way the state structured the role of a school committee. "I have a lot of confidence in our superintendents and principals. They will keep us up to date on any hirings and may ask for our opinion, but the final decision is [Malvey's]," he said, adding. "I've been very comfortable with the decisions he has made."

"Imagine having a business where the CEO, in this case the superintendent, needs to hire a management team and can't. We got out of the business of hiring."

— Ralph Kidder, former school committee member

The school committee's biggest roles now, can also be two of the more unpleasant ones. In crafting a budget, the school committee has the last say in what stays and goes.

The Cohasset school committee recently wrapped up its budget negotiations, and submitted a $10.1 million budget to the town for its consideration.

It's other big role is setting general policies for the town's three schools.

Martin said it's the school committee's job to take information from parents, craft or revisit a certain policy and then leave it up to the principals to implement it. "They're the day to day people," she said.

McCarthy believes education reform, in general, has been good for the state, and as far as the school committee goes, she's also content with its role. "I'm not sure it needs more power," she said, "Basically the committee directs the schools how they should perform and how they should handle themselves."

McCarthy said because of education reform, school committees now have mandated power, and that it is "up to that committee on how to act with that...The committee is only as good as the people on it."

Village workshop on sidewalks, travel pattern

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, in partnership with the Cohasset Village Revitalization Task Force, is sponsoring the fourth in a series of five community workshops to develop designs for infrastructure, circulation, and streetscape improvements in Cohasset Village. The workshop will be held on Monday, March 26 at 7:30 p.m. at the St. Anthony's Church Parish Center.

The Cecil Group, urban landscape design consultants, will review various design alternatives for new sidewalk and crosswalk dimensions and materials, a one-way travel pattern in the village, reversing the existing parking configuration on Depot Court, changing some of the parking along South Main Street from angle to parallel, improve parking and circulation in rear municipal parking lot, and providing pedestrian-scale lighting and other forms of streetscape amenities.

The design ideas presented at this workshop are a culmination of the public input received, land survey information completed, and the work of the designers at The Cecil Group. The goal of this workshop is to reach agreement on some of the options, refine the existing ideas, and formalize a community consensus on definitive aesthetic, circulation, and safety changes to the village infrastructure.

Preliminary designs and ideas are on display at the CRC office located at 87 Elm St. (across from Kimball's). Office hours are Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday from 10 am – 4 p.m.; Tuesday noon – 8 p.m.

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

GREETINGS

Hello Cohasset! I hope this finds all of you dry and safe as we experience a huge amount of water in our yards, streets and (gulp) basements. Hopefully a nice, dry Spring is in the forecast.

NEW ARRIVAL

I want to start this column by introducing a new little guy who was born in the crazy storm of last week. Nicholas A. Grazioso was born on Tuesday, March 6 at 11:31 a.m. Nicholas is the new son of Henry and Dr. Christine Grazioso of Marshfield and joins his big brother Alex, 1 1/2 at home. Dr. Grazioso is a pediatric dentist whose practice is at the new medical building on Rte. 3A. Little Nicholas weighed in at 6 lbs.13 oz. and was 19-3/4 ins. long. I am sure that all are enjoying this wonderful little bundle! Congratulations to you all.

DEAN'S LIST

Providence College had some news to share. Andrea Freeman, a CHS graduate and class of 2001 at Providence, was named to the dean's list for the Fall 2000 semester. Andrea is majoring in management. Great work, Andrea.

UMass Amherst wanted us to know about a Cohasset student who made the fall semester dean's list at this school. Ryan S. McWilliams of Lamberts Lane was named to the dean's list. Another great accomplishment for a CHS graduate!

BC HIGH HONOR ROLL

BC High School had quite a list of Cohasset students named to the second-quarter honor roll. They are: High Honors, Christopher J. Carr, David Crowley-Buck and Evan M. McCaffrey. Students who made honors were: Edward M. Chase, John R. Crowley-Buck, Matthew R. Meikleham and Gregory F. Smith. Congratulations to you all.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Save the watershed

With all the snow and rain we've had over the past two weeks, it's tough to imagine drought conditions. But the facts are that despite a wet winter — although that certainly helps recharge the watershed — the Weir River Watershed is under stress.

Water withdrawals exceed the minimum acceptable threshold, taxing the watershed in its capacity to provide a stable public supply and its ability to maintain adequate habitat for creatures such as largemouth bass, sunfish, pickerel, eel, aquatic insects, blueback herring and rainbow smelt.

The Weir River Watershed, which includes Triphammer, Fulling Mill, Foundry and Straits ponds, the Weir, Plymouth and Crooked Meadow rivers and Accord Pond, provides water for about 38,000 residents in Hingham, Hull, North Cohasset and Norwell.

A four-inch thick report prepared by environmental consulting firm GZA of Norwell was the subject of a public forum on the diminishing watershed two weeks ago in Hingham.

The bad news is our watershed is in critical condition. But the good news is that we have the power to turn things around.

The Hingham-based Water Resources Task Force recommends the following:

- Formation of a council made up of elected and appointed officials and citizens of Hingham, Hull, Norwell and North Cohasset, which are served by the watershed, along with members of environmental organizations, water suppliers and state representatives;
- Development of a watershed management plan;
- Educating the public about the issues;
- Exploration of new water sources;
- Enactment of water conservation measures; and
- Choosing appropriate ways to preserve the aquatic habitat.

Samantha Woods, who is president of the Weir River Watershed Association and assisted with the study, put it best.

"The people who live in this area are the environmental stewards of the watershed," she said.

As stewards, residents can get involved in so many different ways. Individuals can educate themselves about the watershed and its challenges, practice water conservation, or participate on a larger scale — such as helping to develop the watershed management plan or formulating educational programs.

It really is up to residents. The options are endless, but the water supply is not.

To get involved contact Jeff Bettinger, water resources task force, c/o the Selectmen's Office, Hingham Town Hall, 212 Central St., Hingham 02043.

POLITICAL NOTES

Hedlund on transportation board

Senator Robert L. Hedlund has been appointed by Senate President Thomas P. Birmingham to represent the Massachusetts Legislature on the Conference of State Governments, Eastern Regional Transportation Committee.

The Eastern Regional organization is responsible for helping to plan and coordinate northeast regional transportation policy. Current efforts of the Regional Committee include working to secure increased federal transportation monies for northeast highway projects as well as regional rail improvement projects. The committee also coordinates efforts between the state and federal government to provide funds for proposed and ongoing transportation initiatives, such as the Acela Express train service and Boston's "Big Dig" project.

Many local transportation projects have had a significant federal funding component. These include restoration of commuter rail lines to Plymouth and Middleboro, the Route 3 widening project, and many other local road and bridge projects.

"Transportation issues have been at the center of my legislative agenda for some time now, and I am eager to immerse myself in the details of the initiatives overseen by this regional group of legislators," Hedlund said. "I thank the Senate President for allowing me to serve the Commonwealth in this capacity."

Hedlund currently serves as the senior ranking minority member of the state legislature's transportation committee.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Sportswriter

TO THE EDITOR:

I'd like to congratulate and thank David Ingber for his very professional coverage in the Mariner of several of the sports teams this school year. David's writing is clear, interesting, and usually contains some extra statistics and "Notes". It has been wonderful to have consistent news of these teams each week. I think that this benefits those who play on the teams, those who follow the games and meets, and those who are not as connected with the high school sports, but who would like to know more. It is also commendable that he does this at the same time as being on the JV basketball team and being a full-time student at Cohasset High School.

Thanks also to the Mariner for encouraging David's obvious talent.

Gag for the public?

TO THE EDITOR,

The town meeting is a unique aspect of New England political life. Those of us who have grown up in this corner of the country may have come to take this form of governing and decision-making for granted. The town meeting is where the big and not so big issues get aired, discussed and voted. It's all pretty cut and dried to some, but I remember as a junior high civics student being fascinated by the detailed discussions on snow-plowing or road paving or the school budget line items. It was watching the town in collective debate that gave me the feel for the humanity behind the body politic.

In our March meeting warrant Article 7 innocently proposes to change the minimum number of signatures for submission of town warrant articles from 10 to 100. Why? To eliminate or minimize the "frivolous" issues from "bothering" the citizens assembled at the town meeting is the explanation. Frivolous to whom? I wonder. Since moving to Cohasset I have seen and participated in many town meetings. I treasure the opportunity, whether I choose to exercise it or not of being a part of the process. What I sense here, fellow citizens, is an attempt to stifle public debate. I see this as an attack on our right to free speech.

For any of you who have taken the time to sign a public petition or felt strongly enough to put one together and gather those signatures, collecting 10 persons' signatures is not a simple task. It may take several hours or days depending on time of the week or year. But collecting 100 names makes this process a major undertaking requiring organization, planning and strategy. What better way to strangle public discourse than to require petitioners at town meeting to have to stage a major write-in effort before putting their requests before public vote. Political candidates are only required to present 50 signatures to seek public office. Town bylaws require only 100 voters for a quorum to make a town meeting official.

Reject this ill conceived and misbegotten suggestion, Vote No on Article 7.

Community support

TO THE EDITOR:

"That's why we live here," a friend said, while I was relating how many people came to my son's rescue. On Saturday our youngest son fell and in our absence a network of people in this Cohasset community came together to call for help; accompany him to the hospital; pick up my oldest son to be with his brother; travel to the hospital to supply information and accompany and stay with me at the hospital when I found out all this had happened.

The good will did not end there. Calls of well wishes from his peers and our friends continued and an entire Sunday dinner was prepared and sent.

When a community comes together and volunteers its heart for you, you do think that's why we live here. Thank you.

Sewer costs vs. open space

TO THE EDITOR:

Last week the Cohasset Mariner reported background information about the Citizen's Petition that will be on the April 7 town election Ballot to help finance Open Space acquisitions. The initiative may deserve support, but we want to learn more before deciding how to cast our votes.

It does seem to us that there is a higher priority. Many citizens in non-sewered areas voted their conscience and supported 50/50 financing for the North Cohasset and Central Sewer expansions. Most of these voters were persuaded by the historical precedent that sewering is a municipal responsibility. Those same Cohasset residents in non-sewered areas still confront daunting costs if they have to replace their septic systems.

It seems to us that Cohasset's highest priority is to create a mechanism to either expand sewage service and/or share 50/50 the cost of septic system repair/replacement.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

School committee: Should hiring a business manager for the school department be a budgetary priority?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Adrienne MacCarthy

Priorities — we all have them. They help guide us to where we want to go in life and how we want to get there. I believe that the school committee has to establish a "needs based" priority list for the entire school system. My approach to a priority list, would be to rank the items based on how much of an impact they would have at the classroom level. Therefore, I question the need to have a new business manager position during these times of budgetary restraint.

I am familiar with the job description for the business manager position and agree that it would be wonderful to have such a luxury, but can we as a town afford it? I have read the job description, line by line, and did not see one item that cannot be professionally handled or carried out by our current level of resources now available. I believe that a coordinated approach, by the school and the town, can handle the tasks covered by a business manager; but in a more fiscally responsible manner.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Mark DeGiacomo

Town officials, as well as citizens who are experienced in the business community, have recognized for many years our school district's need for a full-time business manager. It simply makes sense for a school department with a budget in excess of $10 million to have an experienced employee dealing solely with the school district's business and operational matters. The good news is that this position is not a new position, but merely a "supersizing" of an existing staff position. As a result, we only need to budget an additional $37,000 to fund a position that I feel will greatly enhance our school district.

Among other qualifications, our new business manager must have at least a master's degree and five years of management experience. His or her duties will include supervising the accounting and reporting of the financial affairs of the school district and administering the operation of the schools. By relieving the superintendent, principals and other administrators from much of school district's the day to day operational issues, we can free up their time to focus on important educational issues. Our research has confirmed that every other school district with a similar size has a business manager or a similar position. The addition of a full-time, qualified business manager to our staff is long overdue and will pay significant dividends for our students and citizens.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Pat Martin

The priority for this year's budget should be and is teachers. Within the FY2002 budget, we are adding five new teachers. Four to address the extra large seventh-grade class and another for next years third grade. The top priority of the School Committee, which has been the same since I was elected, is to maintain small class sizes. Research has shown it's the greatest determining factor for insuring student success and the best approach for implementing the inclusion model of incorporating special needs students into our classrooms. The key phrase here is "maintaining small class sizes". With enrollment increasing at 101 new students over the past three years, it has been a challenge for us. Increased enrollment is being felt on every level. Hence other budget priorities include increasing specialty areas of arts and music as well as providing more opportunities for participation in athletics such as girls softball and restoring our no-cut policy in middle school sports.

The business manager is not a new position, it's the expansion of a part time staff assistant that is currently in place. The need to increase the time and skill set on this position is driven in part by increased enrollment. With 1,339 students and an additional 54 new predicted next year, it has become unrealistic to expect one superintendent to oversee it all. Add the upcoming high school accreditation, sped audit, teacher recertification process and the building renovation project and you see why it too is necessary.

Planning board: Why (or why not) should voters support Cohasset adopting the Community Preservation Act at the polls April 7?

PLANNING BOARD/ Richard Brown

I have mixed reactions as to whether or not to support the Community Preservation Act and the effect it would have on Cohasset.

Certainly the concept of maintaining open space is sound, yet Cohasset already has a large percentage of its space dedicated to parks and recreational areas.

How much is enough? Will this tax be another nail in the coffin that makes Cohasset unaffordable to our children and elderly parents?

I can see both sides of this issue, and I am currently undecided. Perhaps this question is best answered by the majority of the town's electorate.

PLANNING BOARD/ Peter Pratt

Well-planned open space acquisition by the Town makes good economic sense. Establishment of a funding program for open space purchases will reduce municipal expenditures over time, appreciate the value of our homes, and maintain a continued superior per pupil funding level for our schools.

For these reasons, I support the passage of both the Community Preservation Act, as it will appear on the town ballot of April 7, and Article 17 at this year's annual town meeting. The ballot question seeks to add a 1.5 percent surcharge on our property tax bills, after the first $100,000 of valuation. The town meeting article earmarks property conveyance fees collected by the Norfolk Registry of Deeds back to the Town. If both initiatives were in effect today the Town would have raised a total of some $485,000 in the most recent fiscal year, including matching state monies, for open space and associated purchases.

Greater building density costs us as Cohasset taxpayers more money as increased demands are placed on municipal services. As most critically seen in the funding equation for our schools, property tax growth from new housing construction often does not offset the costs of such new demands. A boom in housing growth generated by uncontrolled development could literally drive down our per pupil expenditures on education.

Adoption of the Community Preservation Act in Cohasset will give us a better tool to control growth, advance our quality of life, and support the highly competition funding for public education that our community correctly demands.

Selectman: Why (or why not) should voters support Cohasset adopting the Community Preservation Act at the polls April 7?

SELECTMAN/Merle Brown

Supporting the CPA will add $78 a year to the average tax bill. I believe this is adding more to the burden for the elderly and others that can barley keep their heads above water now. The proponents of the CPA say it will limit the building of more houses therefore less population for our schools. Let's face it, the elderly who can't afford to pay the taxes in town are not going to sell to other elderly. They are going to sell to younger people who have children. As it is we have a lot of things going on that will increase our taxes over the next few years — renovation to the school buildings, new fire/police building and the Central sewer and Little Harbor sewer project still to come.

I believe we should be working with contractors to build affordable and elderly housing. It has been mentioned a number of times we should try and buy the Barnes property. I think we should look at this for elderly/affordable housing, such as they have at Legion Way in Hanover. We could make the rest of the area open space and get the best of both worlds. Same goes for the Wolfpit. If we worked with the developer we could make sure that the septic system passes the present Board of Health Regulations, protecting our drinking water and getting more Elderly housing.

We need our Growth and Development plan in place first, then look at our needs.

SELECTMAN/Tom Callahan

Every community wrestles with the problems of suburban sprawl. We want to keep our towns essentially as we found them, and be able to see green and open spaces. I think we all share a core value in preserving open space. The reality of property development and the law, however, is that often the best and only way to preserve open space is to buy it. It is expensive to do so, however, particularly in an "up" real estate market, Remember how it cost us about $2 million for the Pape Reservation because it had development potential. Grants like the one we obtained for the Turkey Hill purchase are not always available. Our private land trusts don't always have the necessary resources on hand. And looking for a single, large appropriation for a purchase at Town Meeting can be a difficult sell. We need a means by which we can gradually and regularly raise and bank amounts sufficient to buy land we deem essential to preserve when we need to do it. Land banks were the idea once, and the Act is the means now. While procedurally more complicated than originally proposed, it has the benefit of creating a state matching fund (an estimated $25 million per year), which is being collected as we speak and enables us, when the time comes, to double our money. As a well known TV and marketing celebrity would say, it is a good thing

Paul's fight for Canadian post

I think if I were a high-powered advertising man who ate sushi and drank Jack Daniels at a power lunch, I'd wrest the Swedish Bikini Team from their beer sponsor and put the girls on retainer for showing on TV at the next Super Bowl Sunday.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

That's a badly overwritten way of announcing that I have discovered the one thing that is virtually certain to sell products from dishwasher soap to Lear jets; the thing that is guaranteed to redirect our attention when it strays from Coke to Pepsi or from Bud Light to Miller Lite.

It's called sex.

I hope you noticed, as did I, that Ken Starr's investigation of an obscure Arkansas savings & loan failure was going nowhere until Monica showed up at the White House with a pizza for Bill and asked if there was anything else she could do for him as long as she was there. It turned out there was.

Right now, a similar thing is happening to our own governor, A. Paul Cellucci, whose dreams of mushing off to Ottawa as President Dubya's ambassador to the frozen wastes of Canada are being challenged by a particularly heinous crime in his past.

Is it the Big Dig, that hole in the ground in Boston in which so many billions of federal dollars have disappeared that the U. S. Congress is concerned and, believe me, it takes a lot of billions to even make Congress take notice? No, it's not that. Hell, that happens every day in Massachusetts.

Then it must be A. Paul's friendship with George Cashman of the Teamsters, the union that has all but driven the motion picture industry out of the state with its demands on the movie makers. No, it's not that, even though A. Paul was close enough to George to name him to the Massport board.

No, the crime for which A. Paul stands accused is his "support" of gay sex education, specifically his failure to react swiftly or harshly enough in the wake of a workshop, "Teach Out 2000," run by the Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network and sponsored by the Department of Education.

The workshop, which was attended by 14 to 21-year-olds, included descriptions of gay sexual techniques, similar to those that can be seen on Cinemax after the Arnold and Bruce Willis films have been put away for the night.

The guv did what he could to recoup. He denounced the conference as "outrageous" and promised that another one "will not be tolerated." He even fired two DOE workers who participated, but that was not enough for the Parents' Rights Coalition of Newton.

Right now, they are busily firing off clandestinely recorded graphic audio tapes of the workshop to all 100 members of the U. S. Senate, which will have to confirm A. Paul as ambassador, and especially to the members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who will hold hearings on his confirmation.

The chairman of the committee is Jesse Helms, who will be remembered as the man who single-handedly blocked the confirmation of Bill Weld's appointment as ambassador to Mexico because he didn't like Bill's casual attitude toward marijuana.

The latest recruit in the battle to save Canada and Western Civilization from A. Paul Cellucci is Alan Keyes, the unsuccessful presidential hopeful last year, who denounced A. Paul as "not a fitting representative of American values, nor of the values that the Bush administration claims to represent."

Where is the Swedish Bikini Team when you need them?

Birds, trees, pets, and snow

Nan and I have a bird feeder just outside our dining area window. We experience a special joy seeing the chickadees, titmice, finches, nuthatches, woodpeckers, cardinals, and other birds landing there for the sunflower seeds. It has long puzzled me why I should feel such delight in these little creatures. Several sessions into the seminar-Ecopsychology: Health Care Theory and Practice in the Larger Context, taught by Sarah Conn, I've finally discovered the answer.

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

Ecopsychology asserts we need to be connected with nature and community to be psychologically healthy. If we assume homo sapiens appeared about two million years ago, then humans have lived closely with nature and community for over 99.5% of human history. During those millennia, infants grew up in close contact with natural earth, plants, animals, weather, rock and tribal community. But starting about ten thousand years ago farming began to separate humans from wild nature. Fences were built to separate wild plants and animals from domesticated versions. Native plants and animals were destroyed as farms spread over the earth. Today none of us is unaware of global and local environmental damage.

Tribal community and large extended families met their demise much more recently. Some writers blame Western science, the Reformation, the Enlightenment, or various other influences. From the beginning the United States has been a nation of rugged individualists. Separate farm families, then separate urban dwellers.

Today, as Margaret Thatcher put it, there is no society, only family units and individuals. Our homes, jobs, cars, computers, advertising, televisions and phones all tend to promote separateness rather than community.

Therapists constantly hear the phrase, "I feel so empty inside, so depressed." Ecopsychologists understand how isolation from nature and community, and awareness of environmental damage, can give rise to these feelings. Connecting with nature and a supportive community is a way to heal our psyche. In the seminar we have an ongoing assignment to spend at least five minutes every day in some natural place or with some natural being to which we feel drawn. The exercise includes guidelines for strengthening our earth connection. Sarah structures our three-hour seminar meetings to further strengthen our connections. Rituals and exercises are used to overcome our isolation from nature and each other.

Which brings me back to the birds. I began wondering, "What elements of nature present themselves to most people in our culture, despite suburban sprawl, cars, speed, and all the rest?" Here's my short-list: birds, trees, and pets. At last Friday's seminar I had to add "snow", because so many members mentioned the snow of last week's snowstorm. So there it is. The little feathered creatures at our bird feeder bring me such joy because they are one of the few links I have to wild nature. The same is true of trees and pets. If you have a pet I'm sure you'll agree they bring joy and healing.

Which brings me to trees. Lately I've become more aware of how wonderful trees really are. They attempt to undo our air pollution by absorbing carbon dioxide, the cause of global warming. They produce oxygen, when leaves are present. Standing under a tree looking up at its crown, I sense an extraordinary energy. I must confess I've been hugging trees, too. Always seemed like a silly idea to me.

I can't explain it, but it feels great! Next chance you get when there's no one looking, give it a try and see for yourself. Trees are teaching me to stand firmly rooted, to stretch out my arms, and to sway in the wind. You can try this at home. Preferably with children.

I don't know if you've noticed, but Cohasset seems to have declared war on trees. I live across from Beechwood Cemetery, and in the past few weeks some extremely unfortunate cutting has been done there. A row of hundred-year-old Norway Spruces had all their lower limbs senselessly removed. Lilac thickets were decimated. Bridal wreath bushes were clear cut. Maple and cherry trees were felled. This was not done maliciously, but is heartbreaking nonetheless, and much of the damage can never be healed.

On the north side of Beechwood Street opposite Mill Lane, two healthy White Oaks were cut down, one thirty inches, one twenty inches in diameter. I counted ninety-seven growth rings on the larger stump. I'm still trying to find out why they were destroyed. At the intersection of Beechwood and King Street, the power company cut down several glorious White Pines, one forty-five inches in diameter, which was overt sixty feet tall. The power company said they might fall and interrupt power. On Atlantic Avenue a White Oak thirty-three inches in diameter was senselessly cut down in front of a trophy house being remodeled.

Just how significant are these few trees in light of the clearcutting of vast forests in New England and the Pacific Northwest? Not very. But what is significant about them is the attitude we here in Cohasset have toward nature. With all we know about human damage to the natural environment, do we really want to continue with such an arrogant attitude, cutting down beautiful old trees to suit our merest whims? Or do we want to begin learning how to reconnect with nature and each other, to heal our damaged psyches, to heal the damaged earth?

Many of us feel helpless to stop the global despoliation of the land, air, water, and wildlife. We feel trapped in a lifestyle where we must generate many tons of carbon dioxide every year driving our cars, heating our homes, using electricity, and creating waste. We must constantly suppress what we hear on the news about worldwide environmental harm or be overwhelmed with grief and despair. But right here in our own town we can do something.

Please be aware of the wonder of trees. Protect them when you can. They're your friends.

Environmental 'benefits' of runway disputed

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

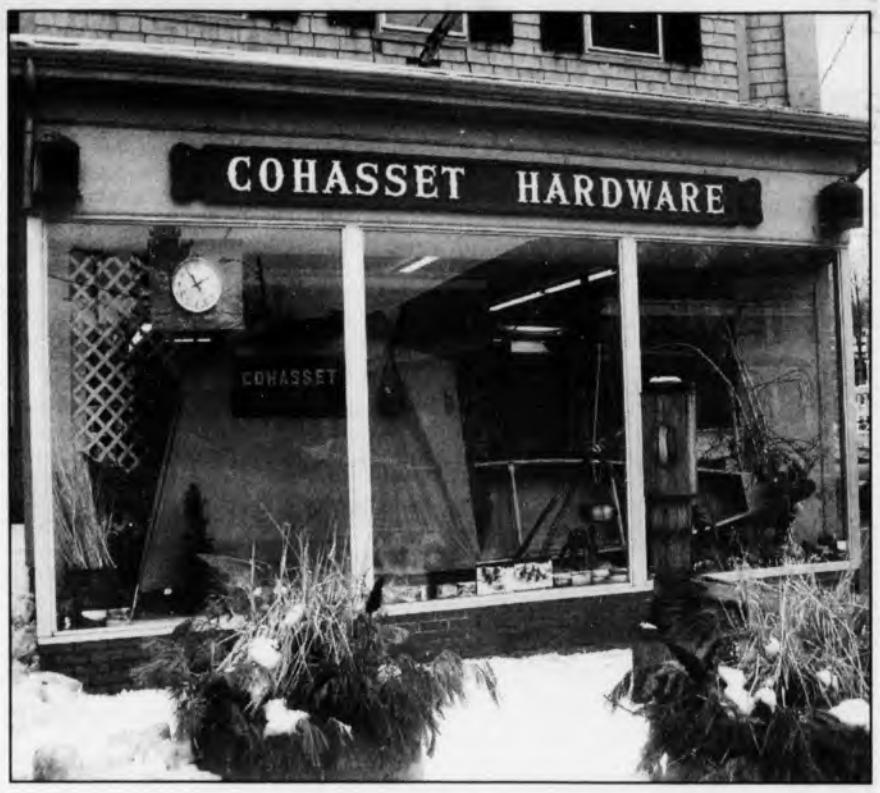
The lead story in the Boston Globe, March 10, 2001, was, "Logan seen emerging as top polluter." State Environmental Affairs Secretary Robert Durand said that emissions-wise, "the one industry that has gotten the free ride is the airline industry." The Globe said, "jets at Logan are emitting tons of nitrogen oxides every year, a key ingredient in both smog, which aggravates asthma, and acid rain, which harms trees and wildlife."

The Globe article says, "Air pollution concerns at Logan couldn't come at a worse time for airport officials, who are trying to get approval for a fifth runway to ease congestion. Still, adding that runway will cut down on air pollution, contends Betty Desrosiers, Massport's director of aviation planning, because planes would not be idling as long as they do now before taking off." Ms. Desrosiers says here that delay equals pollution. Give her a big bonus for breathtaking spin control, Massport! Falling for her claims would literally take our breath away.

It is not credible that the 100,000 more jet operations annually and 35 percent increase in capacity Massport projects for the runway would decrease emissions. It would take a monstrous lot of idling to equal it. Runway or no runway, Logan is predicting increases in delay, not decreases. Building the runway would create a higher volume of traffic and a higher volume of delays.

Massport's runway expansion project depends on using the South Shore for most new operations, on top of the current traffic, including all possible night time traffic. The Massport PR blitz to push runway expansion claims environmental benefits from "over the water" operations which are actually routed right over South Shore towns.

A 2000 study of O'Hare Airport found elevated cancer risks within a 30-mile radius, especially downwind. Hull is 6 miles, Hingham 7 miles and Cohasset 12 miles from Logan Airport. Public health and atmospheric pollution impacts from airports are a real sleeper issue with scary statistics just beginning to emerge on elevated cancer rates, respiratory disease and early mortality.



Logan traffic may already be the biggest industrial polluter on the South Shore. Every plane is like an aerosol can bigger than a brontosaurus, spraying carcinogens down into our backyards during its whole transit. One a minute for long periods over Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. The South Shore could be the Woburn/A Civil Action of the near future.

It is time to take a hard look at that layer of brown smog emerging and drifting from Logan and the voluminous if invisible emissions pollution raining on communities under the jet paths. The Greater Boston area needs regional transportation solutions that do not increase Logan traffic.

I have been looking at the website of Citizens Aviation Watch, http://www.us-caw.org, particularly the "studies" and "pollution" pages. If you are getting interested in the impacts Logan Airport is proposing for the South Shore but you haven't gotten involved yet, this is a good place to start.

Town waits for answer to tide-gate problem even bigger flooding problem.

"This plant basically takes over the normal short grasses...It grows so thick and spreads, it might be the only thing in the marsh," he explained. The reeds can pose a serious fire hazard in the summer, promote a higher than normal level of mosquitoes, and block the James Brook flow pattern and retain sediment impeding the draining process altogether.

However, in order to get rid of the reeds, the salt marsh needs a certain amount of saltwater per day. When the original flapper gates were installed 50 years ago, fresh water was allowed to drain out of the marsh, but saltwater wasn't allowed to flow back into the marsh during high-tide, as it had.

In 1998, the town received a federal flood control grant to improve the drainage of James Meadow, which included adding an additional out-fall pipe and widening the two existing pipes at the "wall" of the harbor under Cove Road near Kimballs by the Sea.. Though the work received the proper state and local permits, the Corps, which last spring stumbled upon the work by accident, ruled it should have been consulted during the permitting process.

Since October, wedges have left the flapper gates open an inch, allowing tidal water to flow back into the marsh. Depending on the time of day, if one was to stand in the parking lot at from Kimball's, the water would either be flowing towards the harbor, or towards the salt marsh. Tutela Engineering, which oversaw the tidal gate project, has been measuring water levels at three different spots in the marsh since then, and filed an interim report in December.

The report said at an elevation of three feet, tidal water overflows the brook's channel, and spreads out over the marsh, reaching a peak of 3.3 feet before the water starts to recede. The water takes approximately five to six hours to come in, and then two to three hours to drain out

Response to report

The report prompted a response by former Fairfield, Conn. Conservation Administrator Thomas Steinke, who developed a self-regulating tide gate which opens and closes the gate depending on the tide level, and was referred to the issue by Reiner. Steinke said in order to prevent the further encroachment of the reeds, more water — up to 3.6 feet — should be allowed to come into marsh, enough water to allow it to soak in more and prevent reed growth.

Steinke took into consideration flooding problems around the marsh and suggested reducing the amount of back-flow into the marsh during the peak flooding months between December and March. He strongly recommended the town install some sort of self-regulating tide gate, or else the town would have to manually control the wedges in the flapper gates.

He also criticized the lack of flood-control alternatives in the town's original grant. Steinke said it would be possible to "achieve reasonable flood protection and commensurate marsh restoration goals" at the same time by evaluating some of alternatives. He made 10 suggestions such as creating a run-off detention basin upstream of the village; diverting floodwaters into other meadows for temporary storage; "flood-proofing" structures in the flood zone; and restoring deteriorated or destroyed salt marshes in other areas such as along Black Horse Lane.

Steinke also called for more studying of the marsh's water levels, saying, "Cohasset has made a beginning in reconciling the need for providing both flood relief and marsh restoration. Time and monitoring will tell how well they are achieved."

Domenick Tutela, Tutela Engineering's president, dismissed Steinke's 10 suggestions, point-by-point in a lengthy letter sent to Town Manager Mark Haddad last month, saying some of the suggestions were either cost prohibitive or impossible. He also said Steinke's suggestion that more tidal water be allowed to flow in is a moot point. Tutela said the average water levels in the meadow are "effectively flooding portions of the meadow" and that any high water levels could cause problems, particularly to properties next to the channel leading to the flapper gates.

"A sump pump discharge has been observed in operation during certain high tide events," Tutela said. "Therefore, any additional field efforts are anticipated to have an impact on the residents around the meadow and should be considered."

Army Corps spokesman Greg Penta said the agency won't be making any decisions until more data was been collected.

Cohasset Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said he didn't have any comment on either reports at this time, and just wanted to get the project done correctly. "I just want it to be done right, and if it was done wrong, I don't want the town to bear the responsibility of that," he said.

Greenbush towns because it plans to submit its environmental impact report to the Department of Environmental Protection — that would include all mitigation deals — late this spring. Cohasset Selectmen have a self-imposed deadline of mid-March to complete the deal.

Adding further impetus to have an agreement signed, Sullivan announced that the Army Corps of Engineers had signed off on the Section 106 portion — historic preservation —of the permitting process at a recent breakfast hosted by the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. The ACE, the lead federal agency in the project, has jurisdiction over the protection of historic properties. One of the unique aspects of Greenbush restoration is the number of historic sites along the line, which cuts right through the middle of North Scituate, Cohasset Village and Hingham Square and across Weymouth Landing. The Section 106 hearings, which took years to complete, were part of the catalyst for the MBTA to agree to a tunnel underneath Hingham Square. With the Section 106 portion signed, the MBTA has moved on to the main permitting process with the Army Corps and other state agencies.

Ulmer said, "It doesn't make any sense to have these checks sitting in the bank collecting 3 percent interest," and added he could have $300,000 in the bank by this summer.

The lab was the recipient of a matching grant from the Jane Cook Charitable Trust of up to $82,500. Ulmer reminded the board he spent $15,000 this past summer painting the outside and first floor of the house.

Sullivan was the only selectman that proposed terminating the lease immediately. But despite their desire to see the project succeed, the patience of the other selectmen is wearing thin.

"We're just looking for something firm that says construction will begin [this fall]," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris.

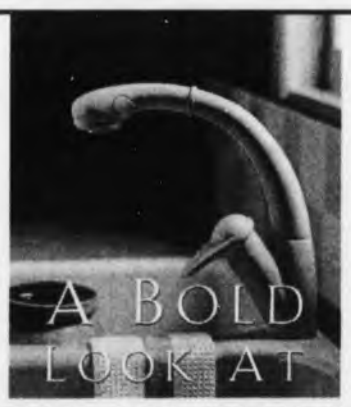
Board Chairman Thomas Callahan told Ulmer he would like to see the project brought through to fruition, but had doubts of his ability to secure a building contract without money in the bank. Selectman Merle Brown feared a half-completed outer shell, and asked the board to forbid a hammer from touching the building until Ulmer has money in hand to complete the project.

The board said was more concerned that Ulmer would start construction, run out of money, and abandon the project, leaving a half-built building on the Cohasset waterfront.

The board voted 4-1 to amend the lease to require Ulmer to raise $326,000 and start construction by Oct. 1, or be evicted. Ulmer said after the meeting that he had no problem with the board's decree. Another $325,000 will be needed to finish the interior of the lab.

Hagerty Property Committee Chairman and Parker Avenue resident Russ Bonetti, along with Sullivan, vehemently disagreed with the board's decision.

Bonetti was upset when Ulmer suggested the project's progress had been hampered by the slow-moving Hagerty Park project. The two-acre property, which is abuts the Hagerty house where the Lobster Lab will be housed, is slated to have a concrete slab removed and turned into a waterfront parking lot and park, but has taken nearly eight years to complete thanks to a long and grueling permitting process.



"I strongly object to his contention that the Hagerty plans have held this project up," he said. "We've asked him twice to come to one of our meetings, and twice he has not even had the courtesy to call us and say he wasn't going to come. This is the first time we've heard about this.

"For him to lay this on our doorstep is the most disingenuous thing I've heard from this most disingenuous proposal."

Bonetti also criticized the board for being too lenient on Ulmer.

"The Hagerty committee was almost disbanded last year, and we were just a few steps away [from completion]," he said.

Sullivan said the board was "being irresponsible" by renewing the lease, which calls for Ulmer to show "substantial progress" being made on the project. "Three and a half year of zero progress is not substantial progress," he argued.

In a dark, dark wood ... the mysterious club-mosses

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

There are pockets, deep in Wompatuck State Park, far off the beaten path, where you can easily imagine you've traveled back in time to a dank prehistoric woodland.

The humus-rich, pine needle-strewn forest floor, dappled with light, is carpeted in lustrous, creeping, though inconspicuous, green plants commonly known as club-mosses - for the botanists, genus Lycopodium, from the Greek meaning "wolf's claw" — offspring of the earliest vascular land plants, plants that flourished some 300 million years ago during the Paleozoic period and whose petrification laid down vast seams of coal.

Though the genus Lycopodium boasts more than 100 species worldwide, less than a dozen species are common here in the northeast, some of which are now protected by law. Small, evergreen and perennial, with needlelike or scale-like leaves and an upright or creeping habit, the club-mosses resemble miniature versions of the larger conifers with which they share the loose, acidic soil of our shady woodlands. Colloquially known as "running pines" or "ground pines," club-mosses propagate by a horizontal root system that "runs" on the surface or underground. The previous year's growth withers and dies, but because club-mosses grow faster than they die, colonies increase and spread rapidly.

Like ferns, the club-mosses — often referred to as fern allies —are flowerless plants, plants that reproduce not from seed but from spores, reproductive cells rich in fat that divide and ripen underground into the structures that produce the sperm and egg. These, in turn, fuse to form the gametophyte generation, the sexual form of the plant. Under favorable conditions, spores can take as many as seven years to germinate and another ten to 15 for a new plant to develop above ground. No wonder the club-mosses are nearly impossible to cultivate.

Borne in enormous quantities atop wire-slender shoots in elongated, candelabra-like cones called strobili, the yellow powdery spores ripen in the late summer and early fall and are dispersed by the air. Over the centuries much lore and legend has attached to spores. Until the 18th century, supernatural powers were attributed to spore plants whose microscopic gametophyte was seldom seen and, therefore, difficult to study. How else then, but by "magic dust," to explain the proliferation of these "seedless" plants.

Hay fever was thought to be spore-induced. Decoctions of spores, harvested by threshing the dried spore cases, were said to improve wine gone bad and to kill lice. An infusion of spores was taken to treat urinary tract infections, kidney stones, rheumatism and liver ailments. Water-repellent and absorbent, spores were used externally as a dusting powder for rashes, wounds and surgical incisions and as a pill coating to prevent pills from sticking to one another. Modern day herbalists still use spore powder medicinally for diaper chafe and eczema.

Extremely explosive, hence the names "vegetable brimstone" and "vegetable sulpher," spores were used in the theater to produce fireworks and stage lighting effects, and by the earliest photographers as a "flash" powder. These days, as in years past, the club-mosses are desirable as Christmas greenery and their overcollection has contributed to their increased scarcity.

My friend Wendy, a curious naturalist herself, first introduced me to the club-mosses in Wompatuck State Park. We were out walking one afternoon and she led me deep into the woods to a wide, meandering patch of Staghorn club-moss, Lycopodium clavatum, that she had found on a previous walk. Staghorn is one of the club-mosses that sharp-eyed visitors to Wompatuck are certain to find. A surface runner extending many yards with precarious rootings at intervals, Staghorn is distinguished by its profuse, erect, forking branches that resemble deer antlers. Also known as "Wolf's Claw" (the roots resemble a wolf's claw) and "forks and knives," the horizontal runners and the erect stems are densely covered with small, soft leaves arranged spirally that feel like antler velvet.

Lycopodium obscurum, better known as Tree Club-moss, is tiny and demure, distinguished from the running club-mosses by an upright that grows as an individual tree. Wendy calls it "Princess Pine," a name that befits its dainty pine tree appearance. These little evergreens, up to 12 inches tall, sprout every six inches or so from a deep underground horizontal stem.

Another club-moss that lives happily in Wompatuck is the "Christmas green," Lycopodium complanatum, also known as "running cedar." Still collected as Christmas roping, this glossy specimen pulls up easily from the leaf litter in long, trailing sections. Unlike the Staghorn or Tree' Club-moss, running cedar grows in tangled, drooping colonies. Its uprights bear flattened, cedar-like branchlets in fan-like patterns.

Despite the temptation to gather these attractive ground covers for transplantation, their natural habitat and subterranean conditions — many club-mosses rely on a host fungi for their sustenance — are virtually impossible to reproduce in the home garden. These ancient plants are best left where they are, left alone for the next passerby to ponder their mysterious underground existence and their remarkable adaptability that has enabled them to survive from a time of vast fern jungles, a time long before T-Rex and Brontosaurus roamed the planet.

COHASSET CARES

The environmental crisis as a moral dilemma

By Allen MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

I've been writing about Bill McKibben in this column lately. Yesterday morning I finished his, third book, "Hope, Human and Wild." Last night I heard him give a talk, and his sponsor, the Boston Area Solar Energy Association, and the location, Harvard Square, probably tell you his ("progressive" / "liberal") perspective. Whatever the slant may be, the area is known for its intellect, and my 'morning after' exercise now is to present what he said to you somewhat objectively.

Being pretty much familiar with his ideas, I was transfixed (not an objective word, sorry) by his eyes, the eyes of a selfless, dedicated individual. As befitting one of his messages, to live what you believe, he was dressed very informally and simply, and after his talk and many questions and answers, politely excused himself to get the bus. I thought of Ralph Nader. I had been likening him to Thoreau in my own mind even before McKibben said he'd been jailed recently for holding up a banner about carbon dioxide (evidently in the "wrong" place at the "wrong" time).

McKibben mentioned what Al Gore told him in an interview about six months into the Clinton administration: "We are in an unusual predicament as a global civilization. The maximum that is politically feasible, even the maximum that is politically imaginable right now, still falls short of the minimum that is scientifically and ecologically necessary."

McKibben mentioned the statistic that each dollar we spend requires the burning of a half liter of oil (and its carbon dioxide emitted in the production of whatever we buy for that dollar). A gallon of oil is burned for each one of us Americans each day in the production of our food. Our vehicles produce their weight in carbon dioxide each year, all creating the hole in the ozone and global warming. He gave instance after instance of documented scientific fallout from global warming.

McKibben said that especially considering the present Washington administration that the environmental crisis must be shouldered by the churches, because this period of time we are living in is the most pivotal period in the history of the planet.

Call him a Thoreau, a Nader, a progressive or liberal or whatever you wish, it's hard to fault him for his main concern, the preservation of the planet. And it's hard to disagree with McKibben when he says that the answer is political. And hopeful when he reminds us that an enlightened 15 percent of the population could lead us to do what has to be done. See you next time.

Regional watershed preservation effort is urged

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The four towns served by the Weir River Watershed need a comprehensive water management plan — before it's too late.

That's the message delivered by Jeff Bettinger, chairman of the Water Resources Task Force, at a well-attended public hearing in Hingham.

At that time, GZA of Norwell, an environmental consulting firm, revealed the results of its study of the 23.4-square-mile Weir River Watershed, which provides water for about 38,000 residents of Hingham, Hull, Norwell and North Cohasset. The study was commissioned by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and also involved the task force.

The four-inch thick report indicates the watershed is taxed in both its capacity to provide a stable public water supply and its ability to maintain adequate habitat for aquatic wildlife, which could eventually negatively impact quality of life. Low water flows in particular, which typically occur during the summer months, limit the aquatic habitat.

In fact, the existing demand exceeds the minimum acceptable "Aquatic Habitat Safe Yield" threshold by 59 percent. In 20 years, predictions say the demand could exceed that threshold by 82 percent. The Weir River is home to brown and brook trout, largemouth bass, sunfish, pickerel, eel, aquatic insects, blueback herring and rainbow smelt.

Massachusetts-American Water Company, which serves Hingham, Norwell and North Cohasset, accounts for up to 85 percent of Weir River watershed withdrawals. Norwell draws water from four wells in the upper portion of the watershed.

Massachusetts-American's actual withdrawals from the watershed exceed the amount allowed by the state. That demand is expected to increase over the next two decades. "Unaccounted for water" also constitutes a very high portion of total usage in Massachusetts-American's system (28.8 percent in 1998). Unaccounted for water is water that is treated at the plant and disappears after it enters the distribution system through leaks or unmetered connections, Bettinger explained. Through an administrative order from the Department of Environmental Protection, the water company has to come up with both a conservation plan and a survey to find leaks and reduce unaccounted for water.

> "We don't want this study to be turned into a doorstop."
> - Jeff Bettinger, watershed task force

The water company withdraws exclusively from the watershed, which is a geographic area of land in which all surface and ground water flows downhill to a common point, such as a river, stream, pond, lake, wetland or estuary.

When the study began three years ago, the water company was registered to withdraw 3.51 million gallons of water a day on average. The actual withdrawal amount in 1998 (the latest figure available) was actually 3.74 million gallons daily. By 2020, that demand is expected to rise to 4.91 million gallons.

The average customer uses 112 gallons of water a day.

"It's up to the citizens to decide what they want to do," Bettinger said.

To that end, task force members recommend the establishment of a regional organization made up of local communities within the watershed district working together to find solutions.

The watershed includes Triphammer, Fulling Mill, Foundry and Straits ponds, the Weir, Plymouth and Crooked Meadow rivers and Accord Pond.

"We don't want this study to be turned into a doorstop," Bettinger said.

Steven Tambini, a Massachusetts-American official who attended the meeting, called the numbers "shocking" and said the water company would like to supply its own comments about the study.

Tambini especially took exception to water level measurements taken during a period of low rainfall, which he doesn't feel represent the total picture.

"We will be making detailed technical comments with relation to the report," he said. Chad Cox, an engineer for GZA, agreed the measurement was only an example of water flow at a particular time and was not representative of the overall average.

Photographs taken by GZA showed dry streambeds in Accord Brook.

"The natural base flows there are quite low," Cox observed.

Regional drive to save Weir watershed floated

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The Weir River Watershed is overtaxed according to a recent study. Accordingly, the Water Resources Task Force has made some recommendations.

"Is it to early to take action to preserve this resource? No. Is it too late? I don't know," said task force chairman Jeff Bettinger. But it's worth a try, he said.

The recommendations include:

- formation of a council made up of elected and appointed officials and citizens of Hingham, Hull, Norwell and North Cohasset, which are served by the watershed, along with members of environmental organizations, water suppliers and state representatives;
- development of a watershed management plan;
- educating the public about the issues;
- exploration of new water sources;
- enactment of water conservation measures; and
- choosing appropriate ways to preserve the aquatic habitat.

"The people who live in this area are the environmental stewards of the watershed," said Samantha Woods, president of the Weir River Watershed Association, who assisted with the study.

The task force concluded that watersheds are important and valuable resources.

"Maintaining a healthy watershed is a good thing. The Weir River Watershed is a vital (source of water), but it's exhibiting signs of stress because it's serving a lot of masters," Bettinger said. "Communities must join together to develop a solution. It's up to us to determine how important it is. The watershed is ours to (preserve or) lose."

While the task force has completed its charge to evaluate the watershed in conjunction with GZA, an environmental consulting firm, Bettinger said the volunteer group stands ready to offer further assistance in developing a working plan.

Citizens organize to support community preservation

— COMMENTARY —

The Citizens for Cohasset Preservation has been formed to support passage of the Community Preservation Act on the town election ballot on April 7. The founders of this group obtained well more than 300 signatures within just a few days' time to place the matter on the April 7 election ballot.

This was well over the number needed and demonstrates strong initial support from citizens of the town for the community preservation goals of the Act.

The Community Preservation Act went into effect in December, 2000. Under the Act, the State and Town of Cohasset work together to create a dedicated fund of money outside of Proposition 2 1/2, from which the Town can purchase and preserve open space, expand recreational resources, preserve historical assets and provide or maintain affordable community housing options. The fund is created in two steps: 1)by the Town choosing to add a surcharge to each tax bill of anywhere from 1 to 3 percent and 2) by the State creating a matching fund through additional fees it is charging at local Registries of Deeds. This State matching fund has already begun to be collected, and will be available to supplement the Town fund each year. It is estimated that the state matching fund will amount to $25 million per year.

The choices of projects selected remains solely under the control of the Town, through an advisory Community Preservation Committee and town meeting vote. The Committee will make annual recommendations to Town Meeting, at which time either a single project or purchase or a number of smaller projects or purchases could be approved, or money could set aside for future projects or purchases. Thirty percent of the fund's yearly revenues must be dedicated to particular areas: 10 percent each to open space preservation, historic resource preservation and community housing. The remaining 70 percent of the fund can then be spent in any of these areas in proportions the Committee recommends and Town Meeting approves.

Local legislators split on death penalty stance

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Garrett Bradley

Bob Hedlund

The area's two representatives on Beacon Hill — who normally work closely for the voters of Cohasset and Hingham — were on the opposite sides of the death penalty debate this week.

In a vote taken Monday, freshman state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, was one of 92 members of the House to vote against restoring the death penalty in Massachusetts. If the bill had passed, state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, would have voted for it.

Hedlund said while he has some misgivings about the death penalty — in the end, he would have voted the will of those he represents.

"I have some mixed feelings about it, but it's an issue in which I do factor in the will of the district as well as my own outlook," he said. "The contact and input I've gotten from my constituents has been overwhelmingly in favor."

"Mistakes are made. I believe in death by incarceration."

— State Rep. Garrett Bradley

Bradley, however, said the issue came down to his own personal beliefs, partly accrued through his time in the Plymouth County District Attorney's office.

"Mistakes are made," said Bradley, who helped prosecute a couple of murder cases. "I believe in death by incarceration."

Bradley also argued that the death penalty has not been a proven crime deterrent. "Look at Texas. They execute more people than any other state, and have had a higher crime rate," he said. "It also costs more to execute them, than to keep them alive."

Hedlund dismissed the possibility of executing an innocent person today.

"There are more safeguards built into these bills than any other criminal justice issue. The likelihood in this day and age, under these bills that have been proposed, of an innocent person getting that far through is almost non-existent," he said.

Interestingly, the death penalty, like abortion is one of the few issues where the House leadership foregoes any politicking, or arm-twisting.

"Each representative checks his and her conscience on the day of the vote," Bradley said. "There is no indication from the leadership to vote one way or another."

The 60-92 vote was the third time in four years the death penalty has been defeated in Massachusetts, but never by such a large margin. In 1997, the House split 50/50 on the vote, and in 1998 it lost by one vote when Rep. John Slattery, D-Peabody, changed his vote at the last minute.

This week's vote lacked the popular uproar that boosted the 1998 vote, which came on the heels of the horrific story of Jeffrey Curley, the 10-year old Cambridge boy who was abducted, killed and raped by two neighborhood men.

Looming over this year's debate were new concerns the state could put an innocent person to death, especially in light of recent FBI corruption scandals.

The state recently released Joseph Salvati and Peter Limone, after they served three decades behind bars on trumped up murder charges, allegedly fabricated by corrupt FBI agents trying to protect the real killer from prosecution. Two other men convicted in the case died in prison. They are also now believed to have been framed by government witnesses.

Those two cases affected the vote of long-time death penalty supporter Robert Correia, D-Fall River, who said those and other judicial errors changed his mind about the ability of the state to implement executions fairly.

"I haven't changed my mind or my opinion on the death penalty. But I am changing my vote," Correia said. "I've lost a level of confidence that I need in our judicial system, and in the justice system in this country, to determine a person's guilt."

In the last five years, four people serving life terms for murder have been freed from Massachusetts jails after new evidence proved they were innocent. Twelve have been released since 1980.

A Gallup poll conducted last year showed that although the majority of Americans favor the death penalty, that percentage has been gradually decreasing, and is now at 66 percent, its lowest level since 1981.

The same poll showed that, when given the alternative of life without parole, the percentage of Americans favoring the death penalty dropped to 42 percent.

State House reporter David Caruso contributed to this story.

While some neighboring towns are pursuing the full 3 percent local surcharge, the Citizens for Cohasset Preservation is proposing only a 1.5 percent surcharge. Additionally, the Cohasset adoption would exempt the first $100,000 in property value from the surcharge equation, and would also apply a low income senior exemption, that exempts qualifying persons from paying the surcharge much as other current low income/senior exemptions do with, respect to property taxes. It is estimated that at current valuations and with these exemptions, the Town will raise approximately $192,000 per year, with the impact on the "average" tax bill of about $74 per year. The state will distribute its matching fund annually, the amount to each community to be determined by the number of communities who participate, ranging from a 5 percent minimum to a 100 percent maximum of the fund the community has created.

It is estimated that at current valuations and with these exemptions, the Town will raise approximately $192,000 per year, with the impact on the "average" tax bill of about $74 per year.

The Citizens for Cohasset Preservation believe that Cohasset's participation in the Act's program, and its early participation ahead of other communities, is extremely important to Cohasset's future. It will, for the first time, gave Cohasset a dedicated and sizeable fund to help preserve its character and combat the threats of suburban sprawl and increased residential development. This fund will help the community preserve valuable open space, or build new and much needed fields, or create new parks and trails, or preserve and protect our historical assets, or help us create affordable senior housing, all priorities of the Town as expressed in a number of recent surveys. It will help us address the always problematic issue of funding these types of projects and purchases, especially as it allows the Town to access the new $25-million-per-year state fund that will just go elsewhere if we let it pass us by and will not be available if we fund these projects outside the Act program, as we do know when we can afford to do it.

In the coming weeks, the Citizens for Cohasset Preservation will be provided in this paper and at Town Meeting additional information and details about how the Act will work and what it can do for the Town. The group selected Debbie Cook as its chairman and John Hartshorne as its treasurer. Call Cook at 383-6313 or Hartshorne at 383-0317 for more information about the group and how you can help it insure the success of this important vote for Cohasset's future.

Kids and stress

Many parents think of childhood as a time of stress-free happiness. In truth, childhood and especially adolescence can often be a time of stress that's comparable to any experienced by adults. The pressures of school, relationships, and increasing responsibilities associated with growing up can combine to make it difficult for kids to effectively handle stress in a productive way.

On Wednesday, March 21, at 7 p.m., The South Shore School Partnership for Health will present "Success vs. Stress: Helping our Children," a free community forum featuring a panel of parents, teachers, and students discussing the extent to which stress plays a role in the educational and social success of students. The "town meeting" format will be moderated by Steven Parker, MD, director of developmental and behavioral pediatrics at Boston Medical Center.

The program will be at Notre Dame Academy, 1073 Main St. Hingham. Call (781) 794-7415 for more information.

Skippers look back, ahead with pride

After surprisingly strong season, boys basketball team looks primed for the future

By David Ingber
CORRESEPONDENT

With a record of 14-8 for the season, amid some of the stiffest South Shore League competition in years, the undersized Skippers saw their season come to an end two weeks ago, a season that no one can feel bad about.

"We thought if we had gone .500 and made the tournament, it would have been a successful season," said 10th year coach Ron Ford, thinking back to his pre-season predictions.

Indeed, the Skippers did make the tournament, and even got a playoff win at home over Foxboro in the preliminary round. Their surprisingly high seed in the tournament, at the number 11 spot, came from strong play both within the SSL and in non-league games. In fact, the team missed out on drawing a first round bye on the flip of a coin with league rivals Norwell, a team the Skippers beat twice during the regular season but wound up sharing an identical 13-7 record.

One of the most amazing things about that record is the level of competition the Skippers were forced to go against this season. Five SSL teams—Coahsset, Norwell, Carver, Norton, and Abington—were remaining in the Sweet 16 of the Div. 3 South Sectionals. And Hull made it six, as it made it to the quarterfinals of the Div. 4 South Sectionals.

Cohasset started out the season by winning eight of its first 10 games to put the playoffs well within reach a month into the season.

The start was all the more impressive, as numerous key players were forced out of action due to illness or injury. The extended absence of junior guard Liam Martin, who suffered a cracked rib in the third game of the season, was one of the biggest blows.

Captain and invaluable sixth man Doug O'Brien will be missed next season...

Still, the Skippers showed their heart, going 5-1 in games decided by three or fewer points.

"They won five of the six close games they were in," noted Ford. "That is just great senior leadership."

The leadership was key all year for the Skippers, with senior captains Erik Shea, TJ Bilodeau (both South Shore League All-Stars) and Doug O'Brien playing their best in the most important games.

Perhaps the most memorable case of these three stepping up big came in the final regular season game, Senior Night at home against South Shore Voc Tech.

All three produced what were arguably their best games of the season, with Bilodeau throwing down 21 points, grabbing eight boards and dishing out eight assists, Shea going for 10 points and nine rebounds, and O'Brien, in an uncustomary starting role, coming through with 10 points and seven rebounds.

O'Brien, a 'jack of all trades' player who many felt was the SSL's most effective 'sixth man' this season, was sorely missed down the stretch, as he missed three straight games, all losses, due to the flu.

Bilodeau and Shea also showed their mettle this year, both playing with sprained ankles for good stretches. Bilodeau threw down 16 points in the Triple threat

Bilodeau brothers lead the way everywhere you look at Cohasset High

By David Ingber
correspondent

Nowadays, nearly every basketball fan complains about how professional basketball players make too much money, and don't play for love of the game anymore.

Those who were fortunate enough to catch any Cohasset basketball this season, and caught a glimpse of the Skippers Bilodeau triad of TJ, Matt and Chris got to see three players who clearly play for the love of the game.

"I don't think they are trying to be the best Bilodeau," appraised the proud father of the three, Tim Bilodeau. "They are just trying to be the best that they can be."

"We always try to outdo each other," said freshman Chris, the youngest of the three, seemingly contradicting pop. Even as early as the first week of the season, Cohasset coach Ron Ford noted how heated practices could get thanks to the intensity of the three brothers.

"They go at it with each other," confided the 10th year head coach, a well known advocate of hard-nosed, scrappy play in practice. "You want practice to be competitive."

All three brothers attributed their great determination to win to their early days of backyard street ball together. "We have always played together," said the elder TJ, a senior and a captain of this years squad. "Playing with them (now) brings back the playground mentality."

Often, the brothers will have vicious bouts of two on two, the two middle brothers Chris and Matt against the oldest and youngest, TJ and 11 year old Mike.

"Chris and I usually dominate," joked Matt, a junior point guard, who likes to follow the 2-on-2 games with an even more competitive "King of the Court" 1-on-1-on-1 with Chris and TJ. "We talk a

All-Scholastic Wrestling team

Cohasset's Littauer named among area's elite

The 14 wrestlers you see honored here are the ones we determined through research and personal observation to be the top overall wrestlers in Marinerland (i.e. Abington, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Kingston, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Rockland and Scituate).

Early on in this process we quickly abandoned the premise of naming one wrestler from each weight class, opting instead to simply go with the best 14.

As you might imagine, this was no easy task. Several of the wrestlers you see recognized here as High Honorable Mentions received serious consideration for All-Scholastic honors. In fact, Cohasset's Terry Baroudi and Dan Duffy, who both did as well at Sectionals as some of those who made this team, were among the more difficult omissions.

Dan Cotrone - Heavyweight
Sophomore - Hanover

Dan Cotrone

One of the biggest surprises of the year for first-year coach Bill Dunn, as the sophomore was brought in to fill the spot left vacant by senior Jim Lothrop... Finished the season with a 19-5 record and took home a Div. 3 South Sectional Championship... Just missed a trip to the All-States finishing 6th at the Div. 3 State Championships...Will be one of the Hanover team's top returnees next year. Hanover coach Bill Dunn: "Once he got his opportunity, he just showed the natural athlete that he is. The younger kids really came in strong and wrestled really well for us. I like how things look for next year."

Barry Wilson - 112
Senior (Capt.) - Marshfield

Barry Wilson

One of the most dominating light weights in the state for the last three years, Wilson is a three-time Div. 2 State Champion (two titles at 112, one at 103)...Also won the Div. 2 South Sectionals... Entered the All-State Championships with a perfect 36-0 record...Wilson finished fourth at the All-States, where in the consolation finals, he suffered a concussion...Though his finish qualified the senior for the New Englands, injury kept him out of the competition for the second straight year...Helped lead his team to a 19-

Cohasset gymnast takes seventh on vault

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Old Colony League vault champion Lindsey Kay, of Silver Lake High School, traveled to the State Invitational Championships with the humble goal of coming away with a quality performance after failing to win a medal as a junior last year.

Kay, who has redefined gymnastics at Silver Lake by setting records in every individual event, including a 9.2 on the vault and a 9.0 floor-exercise mark, had the meet she was looking for Saturday at Lincoln-Sudbury Regional High School by garnering a pair of medals on the vault and uneven bars.

Kay, though, didn't go at the uneven bars cautiously. Knowing she was competing in her final high school meet, Kay decided to keep a difficult dismount in the routine that she has been working on for several weeks. Kay knew it would be risky keeping the front flyaway in her routine, but was also knew a strong dismount would secure a solid score. Her decision paid of as Kay landed the dismount cleanly to earn a score 8.5 for fifth place. and fifth place.

"I knew it was the last chance to do it, so I went for it," said Kay, who works out at the Massachusetts Gymnastics Center in Hingham.

On the vault, which proved to be one of the deepest events of the meet, Kay picked up a score of 8.6, good for 10th place and her second

Marshfield coach John Kenney: "He was always so close. He didn't make many mistakes. He was a great captain and a great team leader."

John Cullen

Senior - Scituate

Kyle became the first Scituate wrestler in a decade to go to All-State Championships this season…He qualified for this event by taking second place at the Div. 3 State Championships, losing to Canton's unbeaten Mike Fitzgerald in the finals This improved on his sixth place finish at State's the year before when he wrestled at 119 pounds….had a 28-6 record heading into All-States this season, and wrapped up his three year career at 63-26….loves a challenge, illustrated by his dropping and adding weight all season to face top wrestlers from opposing teams…would likely have had more success if he stayed at 135, but he preferred the stronger competition at 140…He hopes this will help him when he moves onto college, where he is hoping to wrestle…He has been recruited by Bridgewater State, but may take a year off to work and coach…Scituate wrestling coach Tom Giacomozzi (Kyle's father): I can objectively say that he's one of the most dedicated wrestlers I've ever seen in high school. He really puts his all into this sport."

Kyle Giacomozzi

Adam Hardy - 145
Senior - Silver Lake

The captain finished his senior season 33-7…He won the Division 1 South Sectionals with a 9-0 major decision over Cambridge R&L's Eugene Damian looked to be headed towards a high finish at the State Div. 1 Champ-ionships as well, with two wins and a loss to only eventual champion, St. John's Jamie Grabowski (who went on to take second place at New England's), but suffered a cracked rib on the second day of competition, and was forced to withdraw…Adam also took first at the Cumberland (RI) Tourney this season, second at the Marshfield Tourney and third at the Silver Lake Tourney… also wrestles for a club team at Bridgewater State College…would like to wrestle in college, either on a club team or interscholastically…is leaning towards St. Anselm's and a career in criminal justice….Silver Lake wrestling coach Greg Black: "Adam really came on this year thanks to some hard work. He's a very good defensive wrestler who discovered some nice offensive moves this season."

Adam Hardy

Dan Littauer - 145
Junior - Cohasset

The junior captain finished second at the South Sectionals and fifth at the State Div. 3 championships, missing out on qualification for All-States by one place…After dropping weight to go from the 152 pound class to 145, Littauer dominated the competition, going unbeaten for the remainder of the regular season. He finished up at 23-3, with those losses coming at he Sectional's and State's…took first place at both the Cohasset Tourney and Whitman-Hanson Tourney… Cohasset Wrestling Coach Torin Sweeney: "Dan is one of the strongest wrestlers at this weight class I've ever seen, and he's also a very good technical wrestler. I think he's going to dominate next season."

Dan Littauer

Ed O'Neil - 160
Senior (Capt.) - Rockland

Is hailed by first-year coach Tim Brown as being a terrific captain and senior leader…O'Neil finished second at the Div. 3 South Sectionals, and just missed a trip to the All-States, finishing fifth at the Div. 3 State Championships, which made him an alternate...Had a memorable pin in the state championships as he used a forward roll and a Russian spin to pin his opponent…Cited winning Rockland's first league title in 12 years with a perfect 6-0 record as one of highlights of his senior campaign…O'Neil is considering attending Bridgewater State College. Rockland coach Tim Brown: "Ed O'Neil was a terrific captain. Whatever college gets him is going to get an outstanding person. I have wrestled college as well as in high school and he is the finest captain I have seen."

Ed O'Neil

Rich Omar - 160
Senior - Silver Lake

Another Silver Lake wrestler who really turned it up a notch for his senior year. It started with him dropping over 25 pounds during the off-season to move from the 189-pound division to 160 Lost only four matches in the regular season, and finished 33-7 overall after taking a third at Sectionals and sixth in the Div. 1 State Championships…He won the annual Silver Lake Tournament this season, and took thirds in both the Marshfield and Cumberland (RI) Tourneys…Also an excellent student, Rich has been accepted at Worcester Polytechnical Institute, where he plans to study Aerospace Engineering…He would also like to continue wrestling and playing football at the next level…. Silver Lake wrestling coach Greg Black: "Rich really worked hard all year to get ready for this season, and really improved his conditioning. He really had only one bad match this season (consolation match at State's), and that cost him a shot at All-State's, where I think he would have done pretty well."

Rich Omar

Carl Benbow - 171
Senior (Capt.) - Hingham

Had an impressive senior campaign, which landed him at the All-State Championships…Had a classic rivalry at 171 with Whitman/Hanson's Nate Dineen, finishing second behind the Panther at both the Div. 2 South Sectionals and Div. 2 State Championships by only one-point decisions Benbow (25-6) came close to placing at the All-States, where again he met Dineen in the first consolation round, dropping a tough 1-0 decision…Helped lead his team to a 3-3 finish in the Patriot League…Will most-likely attend Stonehill College next year. Hingham coach Keith Durham: "Carl is just a tremendous athlete. He's probably the quickest upper-weight I've ever coached. He's a very balanced and skilled wrestler, and is a real gentleman too. He's a super kid who's had such a positive impact on the team with his warmth and attitude."

Carl Benbow

Peter Krzyzewski- 171
Senior - Silver Lake

The most successful wrestler on our team with his second place finish at the New England Championships. This is also where he placed at the Div. 1 State Championships and All-States, falling all three times in the finals to three time state champion Mike Pedro of St. John's Prep… Peter, a Kingston native, was clearly the undisputed second best wrestler in New England at 171, as no other match was close… Finished his senior season with a 40-4 record, with all four losses coming to Pedro, and his four year career with over 100 wins…With his top two finish at New England's, Peter will compete at the National Wrestling Championships at Delaware University April 6 through 8… said one of the highlights of his career was avenging a 17-2 loss to Somerset's Eric Dube with a pin just four days later on his way to a first place crown at the annual Marshfield Tournament… Enjoyed a big summer, taking first place at the Bay State Games at 171 pounds, going 8-1 at a national meet in Florida, and finishing seventh at a Junior Olympics national meet…is currently leaning towards accepting an offer from Boston University…Longtime Silver Lake wrestling coach Greg Black: "Peter is the most successful wrestler I've ever had and may be the hardest working too. It's incredible to think how much he improved after just having taken up the sport four years ago."

Peter Krzyzewski

Matt Lipshutz - 189
Junior - Norwell

In his first full year of varsity action, Matt proved to be a big time talent, compiling a 19-3 record… Finished second at Sectionals and then made it to the second day at the Div. 3 State Championships the following weekend. He lost both matches there to wind up in the 7/8 slotting…won the Cohasset Tourney and his only loss at the Marshfield Tourney was to Duxbury's Adam Hicks…With more experience, Norwell coach Mike Ware sees Lipshutz becoming a dominant wrestler: "If Matt works at it seriously in the off season doing club wrestling, I don't think there are going to be too many wrestlers in his class who will be able to stand up to him next season."…Matt's older brother Dan, a senior, wrestled at Tabor Academy this year, and finished second in the Class A Sectionals…Dan plays no other sports at Norwell High, but is a year round member of the Robotics Team. In fact, he helped form the team/club of 40 members which competes in national events…Not surprising, he plans on studying robotics or engineering in college.

Matt Lipshutz

Phil Martin - 215
Senior - Scituate

This "gentle giant" has a friendly manner that seemingly belies his love for wrestling… Observed Scituate head coach Tom Giacomozzi: "If Phil ever developed a mean streak, he'd be a great wrestler. He'd get slapped in the face and the smile still wouldn't leave his face"…The senior still put together a pretty sound campaign, compiling a 19-3 season before going on to take fourth place at the Div. 3 South Sectionals, followed by a sixth at the State's the following week to earn him an alternate spot for All-States…Coach Giacomozzi figures his season would have been even better if he hadn't missed the first three weeks of the season…Phil is considering Quincy College to continue his education, but is not sure if he will continue wrestling.

Skippers look back, ahead with pride

team's tourney win over Foxboro, a game he was questionable for right up until game time.

In addition to receiving great performances all year from the veterans, Ford was pleasantly surprised by the contributions from a few new sources of a few the Skippers had several many new faces that were great contributors all year.

Freshman Sean Connolley stepped into the starting center role, giving Cohasset a much needed threat in the low post and a presence in the middle. This was no easy task, as he was frequently matched up against much older, and more experienced players, like All-Stars Jessie McKinnell of Scituate, Nate Frazier of Carver, and John Lidington of Hull.

Sophomore power forward Ben Lynner, one of only three six footers on the team along with Connolley and O'Brien, was a force on the offensive and defensive glass all year, leading the team in rebounds.

Junior point guard Matt Bilodeau, who saw some starting time as a sophomore last year, ran the offense smoothly all year, and gave some much needed offensive support, a rarity at that position.

A handful of juniors—Nick Bolster, Pete Maitland and Martin— all helped compliment their teammates with hard-nosed rebounding and aggressive drives to the basket.

Perhaps the brightest light to emerge on the Skippers' horizon this season was freshman Chris Bilodeau, who led the JV team in scoring despite missing many games to play with the varsity.

Next year, Cohasset will move down into Div. 4 come tournament time, with an enrollment that puts the Skippers as one of the smallest schools in that division. Still, the possibility of Cohasset's first Sectional Championship since the days of Jared Hardwick appear quite distinct.

Freshman center Sean Connolley filled a big hole in the middle for the Skippers this season, and should continue to improve over the next several seasons.

lot of trash. It is pretty intense." Chris does his best to use the heated driveway rivalries to his advantage in real games.

"I try to absorb their knowledge and do what they do," he stated.

When watching Chris play, it is obvious to see how much he has learned from his senior and junior brothers, as he has mastered both TJ's outstanding perimeter jump shot and Matt's uncanny ability to drive to the hoop and shoot over much taller opponents.

"It definitely makes him a better player," appraised Ford. "He is one the best players on the South Shore for his age."

Though their styles of play do contrast one another, Ford values the way the disparate strengths compliment his attack, and he often got quite a kick showing this off by putting all three on the floor at once.

"They compliment each other very well," effused Ford. "They have all found another sport to play, but [basketball] is the one sport that they can play together."

The other sports Ford was referring to also have Bilodeaus at the top of their respective Cohasset teams. TJ is about to start his second year as a captain and shortstop for the baseball team. Matt led the Sectional Semi-Finalist soccer team in scoring, and Chris, as a freshman, was among the team leaders in receptions for the varsity gridiron squad.

"I am pretty old school when it comes to sports," confided a grinning Tim Bilodeau, a former basketball player for Roxbury Latin High School, and a baseball and football player in college at Harvard.

But even with their talents in those other sports, the people around the Bilodeau brothers know that their ability on the hardwood floor is a result of their perseverance and determination, not necessarily God-given ability.

"I am proud of the fact that they get the most of their ability with work ethic and discipline," appraised Mr. Bilodeau.

In addition to working harder than just about anyone else on the court, the Bilodeaus also play just as much, if not more, than anyone out there. TJ and Matt were teammates during grades six through eight on the Coastal Pops AAU team. Chris also has competed at the AAU level, along with his freshman teammate Sean Connolly.

As if leading the Skippers on the athletic fields and courts were not reason enough to praise them, they are all High Honor students, something looked at very fondly by their Ivy League Alumnus father.

"They approach the academic side the same way as the athletic side," said Tom. "Maybe there is a little peer pressure because everyone [in the family] wants to do well. . . they have grown a lot through their experiences as athletes, but also as people."

"They are all tremendous additions to our school," Ford noted.

When TJ graduates (which he will do this June as one of the top students in his remarkably bright class) he will leave Chris and Matt, and eventually Mike, the reins to the Cohasset basketball leadership role. And he feels confident that they will all do as good a job as him at leading the Boys in Blue.

"Matt will definitely be one of the leaders, and Chris will be a scoring threat," offered the eldest brother.

Whatever the future may hold for the remaining Bilodeaus after TJ graduates, Skipper fans will have at least a few more years of some the most competitive balling on the South Shore. It doesn't give you basketball fans much to complain about, does it?

Lacrosse team wins U-12 Indoor

In the Top Gun U-12 lacrosse final at Plymouth, Cohasset played Free Agents in a memorable game. Led by Coach Paul Trendowicz Jr., Cohasset beat Plymouth, Duxbury, and Derby on their path to the final.

Anchored by the strong defense of Patrick Flynn, and Dan Trendowicz, Cohasset attacked and scored first with Jared Kinch assisting Mike Bunstein. Cohasset goalie, Logan Chase repelled several attacks before Free Agents broke through with three quick goals. Unaccustomed to trailing opponents, Cohasset bounced back with superb goals by Kinch, Trendowicz, and Aidan Buick. Chase made a magnificent kick save, but was left helpless by two quick Agents' goals, to make the score 5 to 4 Agents. The teams moved from end to end, with Cohasset's Robert Silvia, Adam Smith, and Parker Berg fighting hard to slow the rugged Agents' middies. Bobby Meikelham and Jeff Brown got open and fed Buick for Cohasset goals 5 and 6. Despite this flurry of goals, Cohasset found themselves behind at the half by 8 to 6.

If the first half had been a seesaw affair, the first six minutes of the second half were all Cohasset, as shots pelted the Agents' goal. After four minutes of relentless pressure, Cohasset broke through on a solo effort by Trendowicz. Aided by the hustle of Andrew Clark, Sam Parker, and Jared Dick the onslaught continued, and it wasn't long before the pressure paid off with the tying goal by Bunstein, and the go-ahead goal by Buick. Cohasset had a well-deserved lead which increased when Kinch scored on a powerful shot. With both goalies performing heroics, the game hung in the balance. The Agents responded with sustained pressure, and if not for MVP goalie Chase and the stubborn defense of Ryan Kucinski, Flynn, and Cory Chase, Cohasset might have yielded several goals. The Agents' perseverance paid off with a goal, but Flynn scored for Cohasset to make the score 11 to 9 with four minutes left. Back came the Agents to make it 11 to 10. Bunstein tried to pad the lead with a solo charge downfield, but was denied. The resilient Agents replied with the tying goal at the two-minute mark.

As spectators watched intently, Cohasset dug deep while both teams fought for that winning shot. As Kinch battled for possession, Buick reached high, took a loose ball, and shot over the onrushing goalie for the winning goal, with t irty seconds to go.

What a finish - what a game - what a team.! Well done Cohasset on your championship win.

Cohasset's Abby Greer shares her love for horses

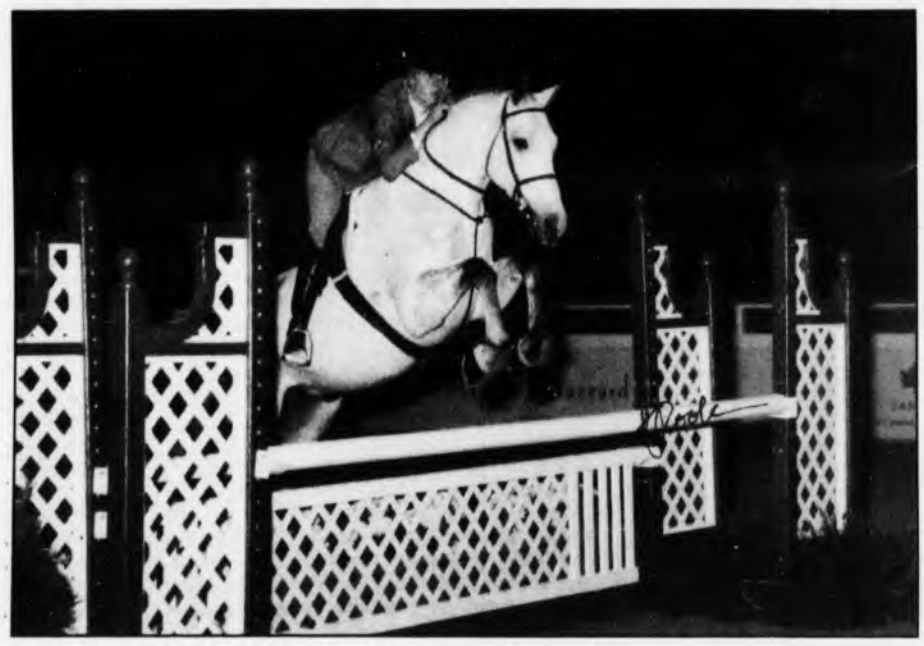
lades in her field during her 11-year tenure as a professional rider, including top-ribbon honors at some of the industries' biggest events, such as the prestigious Washington International and Pennsylvania National Horse Shows. In addition, Greer has also picked up championship awards at the National Horse Show held at Madison Square Garden in New York City, and more recently was a winner at the Ocala Horse Show in Florida this past February, taking home a victory along with Cohasset students Spencer and Caroline Saltonstall, as well as Sara Lambert, who all won ribbons.



While she says it's a good feeling to be recognized as one of the leading equestriennes in the country, a modest Greer is quicker to point out the accomplishments of her students, stating as a teacher, the most gratification one can hope to receive as an instructor is knowing you have taught someone well and are aware that you, in your small way, helped them to reach a goal.

"It's such a nice feeling seeing one of your pupils [succeed]," Greer says. "It's nice to see all their hard work come together, and for them to leave a show with a ribbon for their efforts. It's very rewarding."

Caroline Saltonstall , 10, of Jerusalem Road, takes lessons at River Wind along with her mother Spencer and sister, Elizabeth, 7. Caroline says Greer has the right mix of encouragement, patience and discipline.

"I think she is really encouraging," says Caroline, adding that Greer makes sure all the students do their share. That includes grooming the horses, putting on the harness and saddle and walking the horse for about 10-15 minutes following a lesson until it settles down.

In addition to Greer's teaching, the Cohasset champion also aids in handling the "business" end of the farm along with partner Carl Catani (Greer's former trainer at River Wind). This includes, among other things, the buying and selling of the River Wind Farm's top-notch horses.

Abby Greer jumping Petrus at the Washington International Horse Show last fall.

Abby and Will Greer horsing around on the Ocala, Fla. show grounds.

Catani has known Greer since she first started riding at River Wind. He says Greer is so good with horses that she is often asked to ride other professional's horses too in shows.

"She knows how to get the best out of a horse and can make an okay horse look good," he says.

A member of the CHS Class of 1988 and graduate of Babson College in Wellesley, where she received her degree in Business Administration — Greer is not only a winning performer, but a winning businesswoman as well. She has helped to make River Wind Farm one of the largest facilities of its kind on the South Shore and that, along with the tremendous satisfaction and dedication given to both riders and their boarders by Greer and her staff, is something she takes pride in knowing.

What does the future hold for this fine equestrienne and teacher? Besides her "other" full-time occupation as wife to ex-major leaguer Ken Greer and the couple's 18-month-old son Will, Greer hopes to just keeping on doing what she's doing now for a long time to come. Greer has no plans to abandon competitive performing herself anytime soon, and the same holds true for teaching the art she has loved and mastered. She is right where she wants to be right now, living out a dream which commenced a long time ago in a place she now calls one of her "homes."

Greer is indeed, one of the "lucky" ones.

And luck really had nothing to do with it at all.

Staff writer Mary Ford also contributed to this story.

Local man sentenced for child pornography

Mark R. Sullivan, 34, of Pembroke, was sentenced Monday to two months in prison for taking photos of nude children at beaches in Hull and Cohasset during the summer of 1999. A Middlesex Superior Court judge suspended the rest of the 2-1/2 year sentence in a plea agreement in which Sullivan admitted guilt to several counts of child pornography.

According to Cohasset Police Sgt. Robert Jackson, Sullivan had been confronted by town police on separate occasions in 1996 and 1999. "We'd be down at the beach and see him, and people would say there's this suspicious guy down here with binoculars and a camera," Jackson said. "We'd remove him from the beach because he didn't have a sticker, but we couldn't find any violations." He said Sullivan was also spotted around Sandcastles Daycare Center on Route 3A, but again police did not find any violations.

Jackson said once Sullivan was arrested in Concord and the photos seized, Cohasset police were able to identify some of the pictures as being taken at Sandy Beach. Cohasset police then filed charges in Norfolk County, which were then merged with the Middlesex County charges.

Sullivan was apprehended after taking pictures of children at Walden Pond. He aroused the suspicion of authorities when he was seen there with a camera and binoculars, photographing young children. He carried a Boston police badge. While on probation he was ordered to stay away from unsupervised encounters with children, the Internet and to receive counseling.

Arrests follow barroom fight

Police arrested two men following a barroom brawl at KoKo Island off Rte. 3A in the early hours of Sunday morning.

When Cohasset Officer William Quigley arrived at the scene at about 1:15 a.m., he ordered the unruly crowd away from the two males who were fighting. The group of men did not listen to Quigley's verbal commands, according to the police report. So the officer hit an unidentified man, who was allegedly holding one of the men involved in the fight down, with his police baton on the leg to get him to back away. He also hit one of the men, Christopher M. Pepe, who was later charged, on the forearm and leg and called for backup.

Sgt. John Conte assisted in clearing the bar of other patrons and several Hingham units arrived to help as well, the police report stated.

Police charged William P. Toland Jr., 35, of 80 Glades Road, Scituate and Christopher M. Pepe, 29, of 10Nut Island Ave., Quincy with fighting and disorderly conduct. At the time of the arrest both men were bloody and yelling at each other, police said. Members of the Cohasset and Scituate fire departments treated the men at police headquarters where they refused any further medical treatment. Neither man wanted to file assault and battery charges on the other.

Police said Pepe's earring was ripped out of his left ear during the fight. Police said although both men had been drinking, neither appeared to be intoxicated. Quigley said the staff a KoKo Island was cooperative.

The men were arraigned Monday in Quincy District Court. The charges were continued without a finding for three months meaning if they stay out of trouble, the charges will be dismissed at that time, Sgt. Robert Jackson said. Both men were required to pay $135 each in court costs.

Police arrest 24 in past two months

There were eight arrests in February, two for Violation Controlled Substance Act, two for the Motor Vehicle Violations, one for Violation of a Protective Order, one for Operating Under the Influence of Liquor, one for Protective Custody, and finally one for Minor Transporting Liquor, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

In January there were 16 arrests, five for Operating Under the Influence of Liquor; four for Minor Transporting Alcohol; two for Larceny; one for Receiving Stolen Property; one for Assault and Battery; one for Operating after Revocation, one for an Outstanding Warrant and finally one arrest for Possession of a Class A Substance, Possession of Instruments to Administer Controlled Substance, and Operating Under the Influence of Drugs, Noonan said.

Over the past two months, police investigated 33 motor vehicle accidents, six of which resulted in injuries. There were 219 Motor Vehicle Citations issued totaling $5,940 in fines. Additionally, there were 108 parking tickets issued for $3,075 in fines.

Also in the months of January and February the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 1,044 calls for police services, of those 218were Emergency 911 calls.

Sergeant Robert W. Jackson completed a three-week Command Training Program Feb. 9. The program was held at the New England Law Enforcement Institute at Babson College. The Command Training Program provides command officers with the skills needed to exercise effective management practices.

The history behind the horror

Scituate author researches the truths behind legendary monsters

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Radu Florescu can tell you the real stories behind some of the world's most horrifying monsters.

Florescu, a retired Boston College history professor and Scituate resident, has written two books based on famous horror figures along with his colleague Raymond McNally, who still teaches at the university. On his own, Florescu wrote another book about the infamous creature known as Frankenstein's monster.

The most recent book Florescu and McNally published is called "In Search of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," which is the story behind author Robert Louis Stevenson's classic novella about dual personalities called "The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

"There was a prototype for the person that Stevenson portrayed in his novella," Florescu said. "The man's name was William Deacon Brodie, and he was a Scotsman of the 18th century. He was a perfect gentleman during the day, but at night, he got pretty nasty."

Florescu said the first section of the book focuses on Brodie's life—by day, Brodie was a respected member of society. He belonged to the city council, and he was rather wealthy. By night, Brodie took up with thieves, had many mistresses, and was also a drinker.

"Brodie's character was the beginning of Stevenson's inspiration," Florescu said. "Stevenson himself sort of led what could be considered as a double life."

Although the focal point of "In Search of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" is examining the character of Brodie, it also gets into the life of Stevenson, his travels, and his personality. The book ends with a "travelogue" which gives readers names of places where Brodie spent his days in Scotland.

The other book Florescu and McNally co-authored — "In Search of Dracula," was published in the early 1970s.

"Dracula was a person who hit closer to home for me," Florescu said, noting Dracula's roots are grounded in Romania, Florescu's native country. Currently, Florescu serves as the honorary consulate of Romania in Boston.

"When I first came to Boston College and met (McNally), he asked me whether I had ever read Bram Stoker's 'Dracula,' but I never did at that time. But he listed a number of places that were mentioned in (Stoker's) book, and I told him they were all authentic, and that I knew them as a boy growing up there."

Florescu said he never bothered to read the tale of Dracula, but moreover, he said vampires were never very popular in Romania. In any case, McNally's intrigue with the landmarks in Stoker's book led to a search of the real person known as Dracula and McNally and Florescu had began their long-time friendship.

"Dracula was a Romanian prince otherwise known as Vlad the Impaler," Florescu said. "But he was never a vampire. The other thing a lot of people probably do not know is that there were many of these princes in Romania. These were not people who were very well known in the course of history."

Florescu said he and McNally had specific roles in writing the books. Florescu said his role is researching the history aspect of a given subject, while McNally often looks into the literary component. In order to write the books, both men had to do a lot of traveling abroad to places like Romania, Scotland, and Germany.

In terms of writing the historical books, Florescu has ventured out on his own without McNally. Florescu explained that he wrote "In Search of Frankenstein" by himself because McNally was working on another project at the time. Florescu said he was impressed by the work of others who wrote before him in the horror genre.

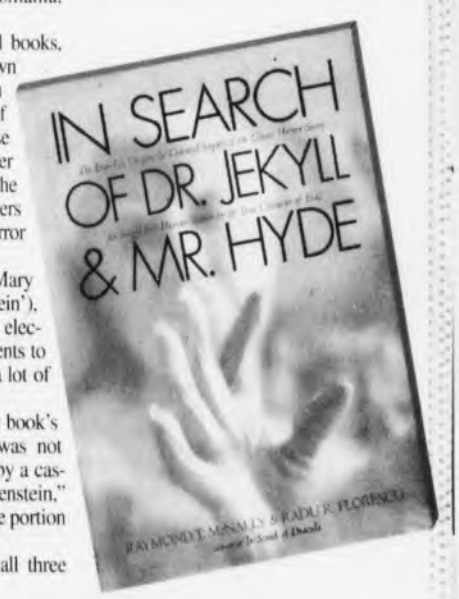
"What fascinates me is that Mary Shelley, the author of ('Frankenstein'), knew very little about science and electricity, two very important components to the book," Florescu said. "It took a lot of detective work on her part."

Florescu said the character of the book's main figure Victor Frankenstein was not inspired by an actual creation, but by a castle in Germany called "Castle Frankenstein," where Shelley actually wrote a large portion of the book.

Regarding the literary value of all three horror-based books, Florescu said "When you can tie a legendary personality in with a specific location, I think people find that very interesting."

Florescu said although he enjoys researching these legendary dark figures, he said he sometimes disagrees with the term "monster."

"I don't consider myself a horror buff," he said. "And keep in mind that these figures were created as monsters here in America through movies, books, and plays. Like I said, Dracula was not a vampire. And what is known as Frankenstein's monster was never actually intended to be a monster, but rather, an idealized form of man. Brodie is someone who simply reflected the dual nature of man. My interest has always been history for the most part."



At the same time, Florescu said uncovering the past is always intriguing.

"I think the most fascinating thing about this is the extensive detective work involved," he said. "You can write a book about Napoleon or Henry the VIII because there's all sorts of information out there about them. But to find out about Dracula or Brodie, a lot of field work is required. I've been to all these places. I've seen where Shelley wrote Frankenstein. I've been to Dracula's castle."

And Florescu has other projects in the works, including books about figures like the Pied Piper and also Bluebeard.

"Evil is just an aspect of human nature," Florescu said. "And people have always had a fascination for the person who involves themselves in negative activities. Sometimes the good in human nature is overshadowed by the bad."

For more information on Florescu's work, call him at (781) 544-1326. All of his books are available at local stores including Barnes and Noble and Borders.

> "There was a prototype for the person that Stevenson portrayed in his novella ('The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde'). The man's name was William Deacon Brodie, and he was a Scotsman of the 18th century. He was a perfect gentleman during the day, but at night, he got pretty nasty."

Mount Blue hosts art center benefit March 25

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

It has been a gathering place for art lovers, hosting diverse cultural events since 1874. And more than a century later, the community that has enjoyed its programs continues to support Norwell's James Library and Center for the Arts.

Mount Blue Restaurant owners Patrick and Jayne Bowe have invited the public to a benefit party for the James Library March 25, from 1-4 p.m. The $50 ticket price which supports the library's programs includes a wine and food tasting, and live performances by two renowned musical talents—the blues-based Bruce Katz Band and violinist Mimi Rabson's "electric power trio."

"We're each going to play a set of our own, and then we're going to combine forces and fool around a bit," Katz said.

Katz, a Marshfield resident, said he and Rabson both teach at Berklee School of Music, and have played together in the Klezmer Conservatory Band.

"She'll play Jimi Hendrix songs with a string quartet," Katz added of Rabson's eclectic musical style. Regarding his own musical methods, Katz said his specialty is playing the Hammond organ. His band features all original, instrumental music within the realms of blues, rock, jazz, and gospel.

"It's a combination of all those things," Katz said. Rabson added she plays her music within some of those same genres.

"What people will be seeing is my newest thing," she said, "an electric violin power trio. It's an eclectic mix of electric music. We play funk, jazz, reggae, ska, gospel, and fusion. We like to call it 'dance music you can listen to.'" Like Katz, Rabson said her band writes all original, all instrumental material.

Rabson said she has a new album coming out in the fall called "Violation," and Katz said his most recent release is called "Three Feet off the Ground."

Regarding the March 25 benefit show, Rabson added "This is the best kind of music there is—music to support local arts."

Patrick Bowe said the restaurant frequently holds fundraisers for local organizations and businesses, including one large summer benefit every year. He said the benefit for the James Library will be a smaller version of the annual summer party.

> "This is the best kind of music there is — music to support local arts."
> Musician Mimi Rabson

"We're expecting anywhere from 120 to 175 people for the one on March 25," Bowe said. "At the summer party, we usually expect up to 500 people."

"We've always thought about doing some kind of benefit for the (James) library," added Jayne Bowe.

Friends of the James Library committee members say the Mount Blue benefit will be a boon for the library.

"It will definitely help us in supporting those programs," said committee chairman Doug Perry. "We always have various art exhibits here, and we frequently hold small concerts.

The timing of the benefit is excellent, noted Perry who said the library is holding its annual "Festival of the Arts" March 23 and 24 leading up to the benefit.

Featured acts at the library during the course of the weekend will include a piano concert by Max Levinson on March 23 at 8 p.m. and a needlepoint art exhibit by Norwell's own Sally Mederos March 24 from 1-4 p.m..

"I'm excited about the whole weekend," said James Library board of trustee member Betsy Gordon. "We're a non-profit organization, and we have to raise money for the services we provide somehow. Mount Blue has been wonderful."

Tickets for the Mount Blue event are $50 apiece and are available at the restaurant or at the James Library. For more information call Mount Blue at (781) 659-0050. For more information on The James Library's art programs on March 23 and 24, call (781) 659-7100.

A live performance by the blues-based Bruce Katz Band will be part of the entertainment offered at Mount Blue's benefit event March 25 to support Norwell's James Library and Center for the Arts.

Pasta with bread crumbs

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Garlicky pasta tossed with pan-toasted bread crumbs can be heaven on earth, or it can be a soggy, lifeless mess of a dish. The difference? Well, as with most cooking, it's all in the details. The garlic must be prepared and cooked just right, the bread crumbs need to have crunch, and one or two additional flavorings help to round out the dish. The most important issue, however, was going to be how to prepare the bread crumbs.

I found that a rustic bread (not too doughy or tough for best results) is best. A country white loaf works well, but any sort of coarsely textured white bread, or even a day-old baguette, will do. The bread should be trimmed of most of the crust, especially the bottom crust, which is often dark and thick. I found that the best way to prepare the bread is to use a food processor fitted with the metal blade (cut the bread into 1-inch cubes for best results before processing). I tested various crumb sizes and found that pieces no larger than a small pea worked best. This recipe calls for 1 1/2 cups of crumbs, which works out to two 1-inch slices of a large rustic loaf or about five 1-inch slices of a baguette.

The next step was to toast the crumbs. I usually do this in an oven, but to simplify things I tried using the same skillet I intended to use for the rest of the recipe. This worked well, especially when the crumbs were first tossed with salt and then toasted with 2 tablespoons of butter. The crumbs need frequent stirring for even browning.

The next issue was the garlic. For a story in the March/April 2001 issue of Cook's Illustrated, our test kitchen director discovered that a combination of fresh and cooked garlic was best for the classic dish pasta aglio e olio (pasta with garlic and oil). I played with various amounts and ended up with 2 tablespoons cooked garlic paired with 2 teaspoons raw per pound of spaghetti. I then tested the best method for preparing the garlic, trying sliced garlic, crushed whole cloves, and garlic that was minced or passed through a garlic press. The whole cloves, if removed from the oil before serving, did not contribute enough flavor, but if left in the dish they did not allow for even distribution: you either got a large hunk of garlic on your fork or you didn't. The sliced garlic had the same problem of uneven distribution. The minced or pressed garlic provided tiny pieces of garlic in each bite which was just what I wanted. I found that the garlic was best cooked over low heat, just until it becomes straw-colored.

As for other ingredients, a high-quality, fruity, extra-virgin olive oil is a must. I used 3 tablespoons for cooking the garlic and an additional 3 tablespoons to toss with the pasta before serving. A quarter teaspoon of red pepper flakes added flavor, as did a few anchovy fillets (these are optional), which dissolve in the oil during cooking. A trick I picked up from the Cook's test kitchen is adding a bit of hot pasta water along with the raw garlic to help distribute it evenly. The dish is finished with the bread crumbs and chopped parsley. Some folks also like a bit of grated cheese on top, but I pass on the grated cheese for a dish because I find that it muddies the flavors. This dish couldn't be easier, and it couldn't be better.

GARLIC PASTA WITH BUTTER-TOASTED BREAD CRUMBS

For best results with the bread crumbs, use two 1-inch slices cut from a rustic white loaf of bread. After removing the crusts, cut the bread into 1-inch cubes and process, using the metal blade in a food processor, for about 20 to 30 seconds. The largest crumb should be no larger than a small pea.

For the bread crumbs
1 1/2 cups fresh bread crumbs (see above)
1/4 teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons unsalted butter

For the Pasta
1 pound spaghetti
2 teaspoons table salt
6 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil
10 medium garlic cloves, finely minced or pressed through garlic press (about 2 tablespoons plus 2 teaspoons)
1/4 teaspoon red pepper flakes
5 anchovy fillets, coarsely chopped (optional)
3 tablespoons chopped fresh flat-leaf parsley
Freshly grated Parmesan cheese (optional)

1. Toss the bread crumbs with the salt. Place the butter in a large (12-inch) skillet set over medium heat. After the butter foams, turn heat to low, add the bread crumbs, and toss to coat evenly. Toast the crumbs, stirring frequently, until golden brown, 5 to 6 minutes. Remove from pan and set aside, uncovered, to cool. Wipe out skillet with a paper towel. Bring 4 quarts water to a rolling boil in a large pot.

2. Add 3 tablespoons olive oil, 1/2 teaspoon salt (omit if using anchovies), garlic, red pepper flakes, and optional anchovies to the 12-inch skillet. Cook over low heat until the mixture is very fragrant and the garlic is straw-colored, about 10 minutes.

3. Meanwhile, add the pasta and 1 1/2 teaspoons table salt to the boiling water and stir to separate. Cook until al dente, about 7 minutes. Drain pasta, reserving 1/3 cup cooking water. (The pasta should not sit more than a minute or two before finishing the dish.)

4. When garlic is cooked, remove skillet from heat and add the remaining raw garlic, 2 tablespoons of the reserved water, and the parsley; stir to combine. Add the pasta, the remaining 3 tablespoons olive oil, and the remaining pasta cooking water and toss to evenly coat the pasta. Serve immediately with optional Parmesan cheese and a liberal sprinkling of toasted bread crumbs.

Astral week

THURSDAY, MARCH 15

A Sagittarius moon sets a quick pace today. Be sure to have a clear plan of action and stick to it, if you want to be productive. People will be outgoing, talkative and may be easily distracted. The moon aligns with Mars at 4:01 p.m. and Pluto at 6:12 p.m. Pluto begins retrograde travel on Saturday, March 17. In addition, a Mars/Pluto alignment culminates early Sunday, March 18. This planetary combination spells t-r-o-u-b-l-e. Don't take chances or do anything risky. Use extra caution when driving or operating machinery. This advice is in effect through Sunday.

FRIDAY, MARCH 16

The moon continues to travel in optimistic Sagittarius. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 3:45 p.m. This moon will decrease in light until March 24, when the new moon culminates. Today a harmonious 60-degree alignment of the sun and Saturn aids focus and productivity. Carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan; handle a variety of jobs and errands, follow through on unfinished projects. The Sagittarius moon becomes inactive at 10:48 p.m. until 11:02 p.m., when it enters Capricorn.

SATURDAY, MARCH 17

The planet Mercury enters Pisces at 1:05 a.m., remaining there until April 6. However, the planet Pluto takes the spotlight today. Pluto, standing at 15-degrees of Sagittarius, begins retrograde travel at 9:36 p.m. It represents rebirth and transformation. It brings a time to let go of anger, resentments, negativity; work toward understanding and forgiveness. Open your heart to higher visions.

SUNDAY, MARCH 18

Mars and Pluto come together at 6:45 a.m., 15-degrees of Sagittarius. The moon continues to travel in conservative Capricorn all day. The planet Venus prepares to form easy 120-degree contacts to Mars and Pluto, serving as a buffer to recent volatile planetary alignments. Channel your passions into creative or romantic outlets. You can cut through obstacles and gain profound insights, deep experiences.

MONDAY, MARCH 19

The past few days have been action-packed and challenging. Influences begin to ease up today. The Capricorn moon forms a harmonious contact to the sun at 9:40 a.m. and becomes inactive. An Aquarius moon takes over at 11:36 a.m., bringing a time when people are more likely to reach out and network with others to achieve their goals. Venus forms a harmonious 120-degree alignment to Pluto at 6:31 p.m. In addition, a lunar contact to Jupiter makes this a great evening for social or romantic activities.

TUESDAY, MARCH 20

The sun enters Aries at 8:31 a.m., marking the beginning of the spring season. An Aquarius moon may point you in directions you do not normally travel. Be more spontaneous and open-minded; explore new horizons. It is okay to initiate new activities anytime after 8:31 a.m. The moon forms flowing 60-degree contacts to Venus, Pluto and Mars this evening. Spend quality time with friends and loved ones.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21

A mixed bag of planetary influences makes for an interesting day. The Aquarius moon and Uranus conjoin at 10:24 a.m. Avoid rigid time schedules; go with the flow of things. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Jupiter generates an optimistic mood. However, don't go overboard; know your limits. This is not a favorable day for launching important activities, making major purchases or decisions. Cool your heels and don't take action for a few days. A lunar contact to Saturn may bring a lull period at 6:03 p.m., when the moon becomes inactive.

THURSDAY, MARCH 22

The moon enters Pisces at 12:28 a.m. and interacts with Jupiter at 12:37 p.m. and Mercury at 3:08 p.m. Don't take on more than you can handle. Choose your words carefully. You may be tempted to overdo, overextend, make foolish promises. You can make headway with projects that need your imagination and creativity. On the other hand, avoid jobs that require mental focus and precision.

Late winter pruning of trees and shrubs

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

PART 2: TOOLS AND TECHNIQUES

In the aftermath of a week-long barrage of consecutive winter storms, crystal blue skies, brilliant sunshine and mild temperatures are quickly beginning to erase the memories of Mother Nature's most recent wintry offering. The heavy slush and snow, which plastered my windows and coated the branches of trees and shrubs only a few days ago, have started to melt away, as signs of springtime gradually reappear.

I am greeted each morning by the unmistakable spring songs of colorful cardinals who seem eager to express their delight that milder weather is on its way. A Carolina wren, perched outside my window in the heavily budded branches of a pink dogwood, sings its exuberant melody, while tufted titmice and chick-a-dees flit about in the treetops, calling to their mates. A sure sign of spring is the return of the noisy red-winged blackbirds who gather in flocks among the branches of the emerging, steel gray-colored catkins of the pussy willows along the brook. The fragrant, yellow, fringed blossoms of the witch hazel "Arnold Promise" have started to appear, the dense clusters of delicate ribbons glowing in the slanted rays of the afternoon sun. From my window, this tree resembles a frilly, lemon chiffon cloud, an exquisite addition to a shady corner alongside my water garden.

The wild winds and heavy, wet, slushy snow took its toll on some of our trees and shrubs necessitating some immediate pruning to repair nature's damage. Early March is also the ideal time to begin the process of selective pruning to produce balance, symmetry, direct growth or rejuvenate old, sparse or overgrown shrubs. Regular pruning will improve the overall appearance of nearly all woody plants since few grow with perfect shapes and even when selected appropriately for their allotted space, most benefit from an occasional trim to look their best.

The two basic approaches to pruning are heading back and thinning out. Heading back is the technique used when trimming a hedge where the entire shape is clipped, producing a more formal appearance with denser, sturdier growth. The thinning out of a tree or shrub produces a more open plant with a more natural, graceful appearance.

Thinning out tends to be the preferred technique for pruning ornamental trees and shrubs. The heading back of rhododendrons, azaleas or other foundation plantings into little round forms often spoils the individual beauty and character which distinguishes each unique species, although this approach is often prompted by overgrown shrubs or space limitations.

To shorten a woody stem, always cut back to a bud. On branches where the buds alternate, cut the stem at an angle and cut away from an outward facing bud to encourage growth away from the interior spaces of your shrub or tree unless you are striving to fill a gap which may have been produced by storm damage. If the plant has opposite buds, cut immediately above a strong pair. Do not leave stubs which may develop disease but be careful not to prune too closely to a bud which may cause the bud to dry out.

When pruning entire branches from the trunk of a tree, cuts should be made just beyond the ridge (above the branch) and the collar (a swollen area below the point of the branch's attachment to the trunk). Sawing a branch too closely to the trunk may disrupt the healing process or may stimulate growth around the site of the wound producing new, unwanted sprouts. It is not necessary to apply paint to the wound as this application may actually interfere with the plant's natural healing ability. Up to one-third of a plant can be safely pruned away.

To ensure precise pruning, purchase and use proper tools. Quality tools last longer, produce cleaner cuts which heal faster, and make the job easier. Anvil pruners have one sharp blade with an opposing blade which has a flat, blunt edge which may crush stems and produce uneven cuts. Bypass pruners work with a scissor-like action, with their two blades sliding past one another, enabling cleaner, closer cuts. High quality pruners, like the Swiss-made Felco, are worth the additional cost for their durability, precision and the fact that they have replaceable blades. Inexpensive pruners tend to be easily bent out of shape which may produce ragged cuts. Hand pruners are preferred for twigs and smaller branches up to half an inch across. Long-handled lopping shears are useful for cutting larger branches up to 2 inches thick.

Curved-blade pruning saws are usually designed to cut only on the pull-stroke and are ideal for larger branches and great for tight places. Bow saws cut on both the push and pull strokes but require more room to maneuver. Both of these types of saws are available in models with replaceable blades.

For performing the technique of heading back, hedge shears are a necessity. Manual hedge shears may be adequate for small jobs, but electric hedge shears are faster and easier and permit greater accuracy of line while shaping.

Town Meeting last hurdle for cemetery plan

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

After more than 15 years of work — the Cemetery Committee is a Town Meeting vote away from completing its mission.

On March 31, residents will be asked to allocate $600,000 for the expansion of Woodside Cemetery and solve the town's burial plot crunch for the next 50 years.

"We've been around and around and this appears to be the solution for the better part of the next century," said committee chairman Glenn Pratt.

There is currently no space left in the popular cemetery off North Main Street. More than 300 plots remain available at Beechwood, but for some reason, said Pratt, more people want to be buried at Woodside.

"We've been around and around and this appears to be the solution for the better part of the next century."
— Glenn Pratt, cemetery committee

"State law says a town needs to have space to bury its inhabitants within the community, so we have to do something," he explained. "It's been very difficult to sell grave sites at Beechwood. People just don't buy them for some reason."

Right now, a family can only buy a plot with a death certificate in hand.

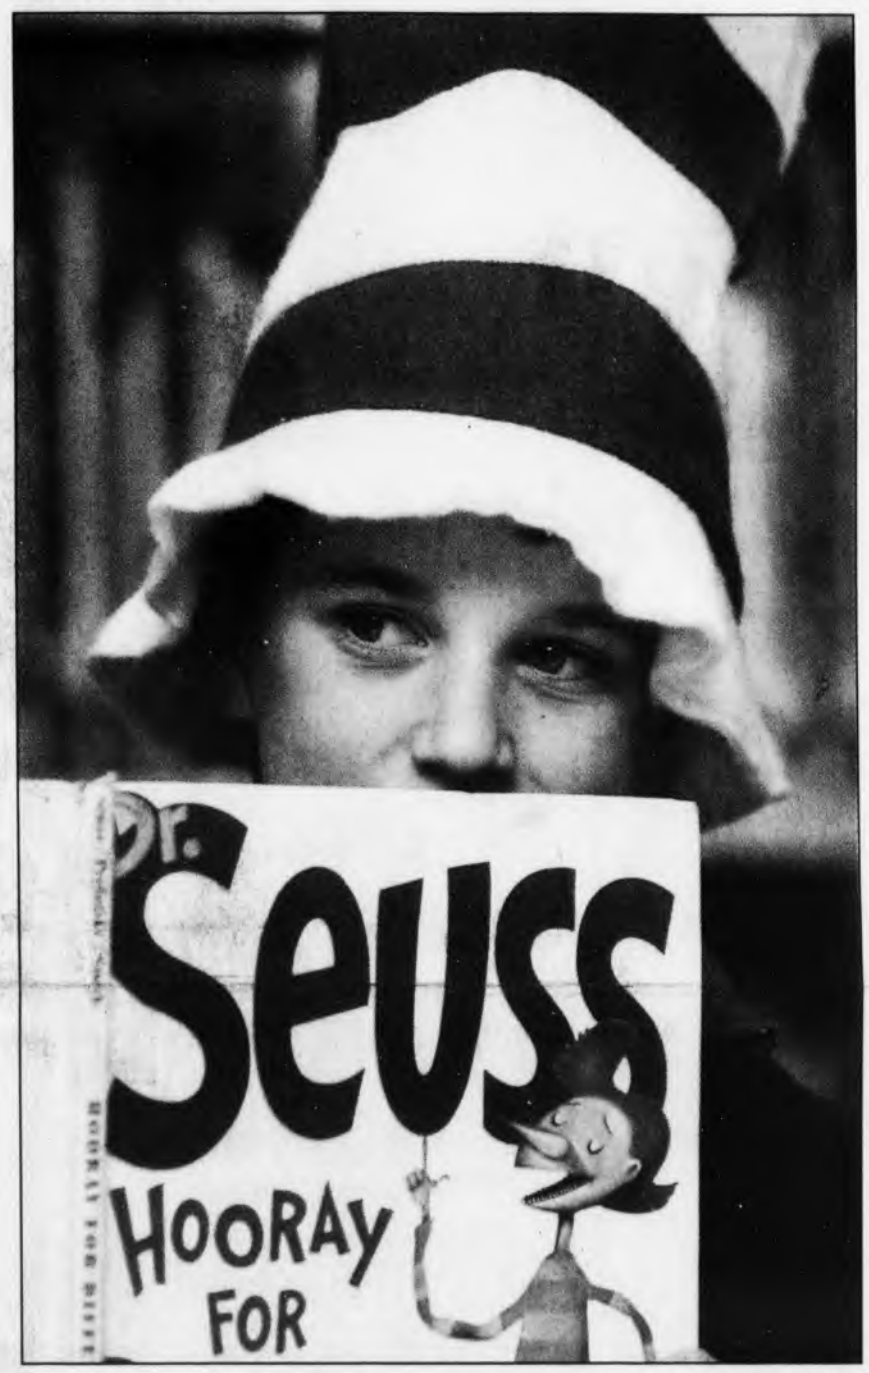
One-way circle in village is floated

Selectmen question impact on businesses

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM



The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation is pushing for a major redesign in the village traffic pattern, that would create a one-way traffic circling counter-clockwise around Cohasset Hardware and the adjoining block of buildings.

In a presentation before selectmen Tuesday night, CRC Executive Director Dean Rizzo, and the group's engineer, The Cecil Group, outlined the proposed change it would discuss at its next public forum on March 26.

The redesign, if approved by the selectmen and Village Revitalization Task Force, would force cars heading north on South Main Street to turn right onto Brook Street and then left onto Elm Street. A car heading past the Common towards the harbor, would be diverted down South Main Street, and then could either turn down Brook Street and pick up Elm Street, or head down South Main Street towards Summer Street.

Disney looking to film in town

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Hollywood is once again knocking on Cohasset's door for permission to film in town. This time, it's Walt Disney who hopes to roll film in town, for a movie starring Academy Award winners Dustin Hoffman and Susan Sarandon.

Walt Disney has asked the board of directors of the Central Cemetery on Joy Place for permission to shoot on the property in late April, said Tim Grafft, the deputy director of the state's film office.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he received a call a couple of weeks ago from the state asking how to connect with the cemetery's owners. The shoot would supposedly be a one-day shoot, unlike the previous two movies filmed in Cohasset, 1987's "The Witches of Eastwick" and 1992's "Housesitter," which spent weeks in town.

"They think the cemetery is beautiful and have been in contact with the board and put in a formal request," said Grafft. He described the movie as an adult "dramedy," — part drama, part comedy — similar to the movie "Terms of Endearment." The movie, which will be directed by Brad Silberling, who directed "Casper" and "City of Angels," is scheduled to begin filming in April.

Disney has already approached some Cohasset residents about using their property the day of the shoot. Joy Place resident Priscilla Dresser said a representative from Disney knocked on her door Saturday and asked for permission to park some trucks in her driveway.

Lot of headaches at CMHS

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The school day is stressful enough. So several Cohasset High seniors think they have found a way to eliminate at least one of life's hassles — the unworkable traffic pattern in the lower school parking lot from 7-7:30 a.m.

"No one has been run down, yet," said student council president Ben Bixby. But Bixby, Sarah Kidder, John Hertig and Ted Gledhill, who serve as student representatives to the school committee, don't want to see that happen.

So they've hatched a plan that includes prohibiting parents, who are dropping their children off, from cutting through the student/faculty parking lot, resulting in hair-raising near collisions.

In a report to the school committee, the students wrote: "Cohasset features one of the highest SUVs [sport utility vehicles] per capita on

Playing bridge has its benefits

Seniors enjoy the challenge, camaraderie

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's down right contagious.

No, it's not nasty colds or the dreaded flu — but a passion for the age-old card game of bridge.

"I started playing bridge at 10 years old," recalls Bill Wennerberg, who is now a certified bridge instructor.

"My father started me and then I stopped for college, the service, children, the dog and the attack parakeet," laughed the retired salesman. "I didn't get back into competitive bridge until about five years ago. I had forgotten how much I loved the game."

Wennerberg, who lives in Plymouth, brings his expertise in the game to Senior Center in Cohasset where his classes are drawing a crowd.

"The room is filled every Monday, I'm amazed," says Kathy Bryanton, director of the Council on Elder Affairs. "They get dressed for it. You'd think they were going to the Ritz the way they come in here.

"They are very enthusiastic about the game. There's a lot of challenge to it."

In fact, an animated Wennerberg,

Disney looking to film in town

She said she was told the scene they are shooting would be a funeral scene, and are hoping to film on April 30.

"They said they'd get in touch with me about a contract," she said. "He said they'd probably give me something $100 to use the driveway.

"It should be kind of fun."

The cemetery's board of directors said it understands there have been some inquiries and would only consider a written proposal.

The shoot would be a return to Cohasset for Sarandon who was one of the three witches in Eastwick, along with Michelle Pfeiffer, Cher, and a devilish Jack Nicholson.

Sarandon won an Academy Award for her performance in Dead Man Walking, and has also starred in "The Rocky Horror Picture Show," "Lorenzo's Oil," "Thelma & Louise," and "Step Mom."

Hoffman won Academy Awards for his roles in Rain Man and Kramer v. Kramer. He has also starred in "The Graduate," "All the President's Men," "Tootsie," and "Wag the Dog."

Haddad said the fact Disney is interested in filming in Cohasset, "is testimony to the beauty of the town."

Story correction

In last week's story on the role of the school committee, the Mariner incorrectly reported that long-time member Ralph Kidder was on the board when Supt. Edward Malvey was hired. In fact, Kidder left the school committee in April 1998 and Malvey was hired that July by the new committee, Pat Martin, Mark DeGiacomo, Kathy Ofsthun, Rick Shea and Joe McElroy.

Thermal camera

The Cohasset Firemen's Benefit Association is trying to raise money to help purchase a thermal imaging camera for the fire department. To that end, association members will have a camera on display and a bucket for donations by Town Hall on election day April 7. The cameras range in cost from $18,000-$23,000 and are used to help find people through the dark and smoke in burning buildings.

Meeting schedule

The following is a list of upcoming meetings, as of Tuesday, March 20:

- Growth & Development Committee, March 22, 7 p.m. at Town Hall
- Conservation Commission, March 22, 7:30 p.m. at Town Hall
- Greenbush Citizens' Advisory Committee , March 24, 9 a.m. to 12 p.m., Hingham Town Hall
- Board of Assessors, March 27, 5 p.m. at Town Hall
- Osgood School PSO, March 27, 3:30 p.m. at the Osgood School
- Youth Resource Committee March 27, 7:30 at Town Hall
- Board of Health, April 3, 7 p.m. at Town Hall
- School Committee, April 5, 7:30 p.m., at the middle/high school library
- MBTA Wetlands Working Group, April 26, 8:30 a.m.

Harbor committee

Jack Brister resigned as the Cohasset Yacht Club's representative on the Cohasset Harbor Committee. In a letter sent to selectmen and the committee, yacht club commodore Charles Dean said vice-commodore Daniel Evans will replace Brister.

New flagpole

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen Tuesday night that the new town flagpole is expected to be in place within two to three weeks.

The old flagpole was toppled over in this month's nor'easter. A weakness at the bottom of the pole caused it to break off.

Second car stickers

Selectmen voted Tuesday night to assess a $20 fee if a family wishes to buy an all-facilities sticker for a second car. Last year, the board decided to combine the Recycling Transfer Facility and Sandy Beach parking sticker for a cost of $50 per sticker.

Selectman Merle Brown, the board's liaison to the town recycling committee, said a number of people had asked him if the committee would continue to issue second stickers at no cost. Brown said the town shouldn't and requested the $20 charge for the second sticker. Also, if a family has an all-facilities sticker, they can purchase just a beach parking sticker for an additional $7.

The new stickers go into effect this summer.

Town docks

Selectmen said Tuesday night that the new town docks and Margin Street pier will not be painted but would be left in their current state.

The issue was raised at their meeting by Peter Laugelle, the town's former tree, park and cemetery superintendent, who begged the board not to allow the docks and piers be painted in "corporate colors." Laugelle was referring to the last summer's mini-controversy where Atlantica and Kimball's By the Sea owner Peter Roy, with the town's permission, painted a number of town-owned harbor-front properties in black and gray – his "corporate colors." Selectmen later asked Roy to repaint some parts the original color.

Selectmen had also allowed Roy to landscape and maintain Memorial Park and Lawrence Wharf, which Laugelle also objected too. He suggested putting it back under the Department of Public Work's responsibility.

However Town Manager Mark Haddad and the board said they received nothing but positive feedback about the parks, and would allow him to do keep on maintaining them this summer, if he chooses.

"We got a lot of compliments about Memorial Park," Selectman Merle Brown said.

"If someone wants to voluntarily maintain Memorial Park, I think we should let them," added Selectman Michael Sullivan.

Community Preservation Act elicits varying viewpoints

Topic raised at candidates' night

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Proponents of the Community Preservation Act may face an uphill battle in Cohasset if Monday's candidates' night is a gauge.

Although the candidates who expressed differing views aren't running against each other — their opinions provided a window into the complexity of the preservation effort. Voters will decide at the polls April 7 whether to adopt the measure that would ad about $78 to the average annual tax bill.

The Chamber of Commerce and local taxpayers group sponsored the question-and-answer session at Town Hall for all candidates, opposed or unopposed.

In answering a question about whether Cohasset taxpayers could afford the preservation act, Planning Board candidate Peter Pratt, who supports adopting the act, said in essence they couldn't afford not to. He explained the cost of development in the end is more expensive because of increased municipal services and more children in the schools.

But selectman Merle Brown, who opposes the act, said seniors have been taxed enough and if they are forced to leave town, families with children who will fill the schools will move into their empty homes.

Debbie Cook, chairman of the group Citizens for the Preservation of Cohasset and is not running for office, was asked to make a presentation on the act at candidates night which was televised on local cable.

The enabling legislation allows cities and towns to levy a property tax surcharge of up to 3 percent per year to create the fund and qualify for a state matching grant. Cohasset proponents are recommending the town consider adopting a surcharge of 1.5 percent, calculated after exempting the first $100,000 of the property's assessed valuation. The 1.5 percent surcharge would be on the real estate tax, not on the value of the house.

Taxes collected under the Community Preservation Act would not be included under Proposition 2-1/2, the tax cap that limits the amount a town can raise its annual levy.

If the ballot question meets with voters' approval, the estimated annual revenues expected would be about $200,000. The owner of a home assessed at $350,000 would pay about $78 annually.

Cook touted its benefits including the fact the town would raise about $200,000 for open space, historical preservation and affordable housing — not counting matching funds from the state. But Elsa Miller, who is running unopposed for reelection to the Board of Assessors, disputed the figures Cook gave.

Miller said once certain properties are exempted from the tax rolls, the net gain to the town would not be as great. She said it was the consensus among the assessors to wait a year before adopting the act to see how other towns fare. (For more on the Community Preservation Act, see page 9).

Pratt and Richard Brown, who could not attend Monday, are vying for the open planning board seat.

School committee candidates, Adrienne MacCarthy and Pat Martin and Mark DeGiacomo fielded questions on a range of issues including special education, communication and the benefits of hiring a business manager.

Voters also got to see Sean Cunning, a political newcomer, who is running unopposed to the sewer commission. They also heard from Steve Bobo, who is running unopposed for the Board of Health, and Library Trustees Barbara Power, Sarah Pease and June Hubbard, who are also unopposed.

Power said the library would learn on June 7 whether the project at the old Osgood School is on the first round of construction grants from the state.

"We think we have a strong need and an excellent application and we're very optimistic," she said. If the grant comes through, construction on the new library could start in the fall. The town is planning to sell the Paul Pratt Memorial Library building, once the new library is finished.

Planning Board often faces lawyers, engineers

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Peter Pratt

Richard Brown

The Cohasset Planning Board, which is one of just two boards taking center stage this election season, can either be the friend of developers and enemy of environmentalists or vice versa, depending on the issue.

But chances are — whatever the planning board decides – won't come easily. With real estate a big-money business and preservation of open space the latest buzz phrase, the Planning Board doesn't have the luxury of remaining the somewhat informal, folksy board of days gone by, says chairman Al Moore.

"Business in a small town government until recently was done informally with a wink and a nod," said chairman Moore, who has served on the Planning Board for 15 years. "I'm not suggesting there was any illegality, more it was just out of ignorance. If you had asked the members of the town board what its responsibilities and purpose was, you'd get all sorts of different answers."

Come April 7, the five-member board will have a new face. Peter Pratt and Richard Brown are vying for the open seat on the planning board being vacated by Terry Atherton, who is not seeking reelection. The only other contested race in the Town Election this year is for the school committee.

The difference in the past 15 years, when Moore first won a five-year term on the five-member board, is the level of professionalism expected of the board by those that come before it.

"There is so much money involved now, everyone comes before the board with their lawyer and their engineer," Moore said. "They pay more attention to the details now."

Moore pointed out the development of Rose Hill as an example of the big-money business real estate has become. "There's 13 houses down there and I don't think one of them sold for under $650,000," he said.

The increase in development and the high price of real estate have led to another increase — court cases. Moore said project proponents are more than willing to appeal an unfavorable decision in court. The Planning Board has been involved in several legal cases in the past five years.

But it wasn't always that way.

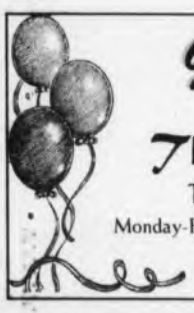
"They used to come in and argue like the dickens," recalled former Planning Board chairman Dan Cotton, who served years back. "But I don't remember anyone suing."

As a result, Moore has become a big fan of giving approvals with a number of attached conditions. "We can't just turn something down, we have to have a legal reason," Moore said. "I believe it's better for the town to approve a plan with a number of conditions. If we turn it down, the burden of proof is with the town to prove why it turned it down. With conditions, the burden is put on the proponent."

The difference between the Planning Board and Zoning Board of Appeals is how the respective boards work within the rules. Moore said the Planning Board can only rule within the guidelines of the town's zoning regulations. But if a proponent needs the rules "bent" via a special permit, or waiver, that's when the zoning board gets involved.

Moore said Planning Board members are a dedicated group. Members spend countless hours on the phone, in bi-monthly meetings and on site visits.

Moore singled out member Bob Sturdy, who is not afraid to speak his mind, as an example of the caliber of individual on the Planning Board.



"We've been lucky to have some very bright people on this board," Moore said. "Whether you love him or hate him, [Sturdy] is one of the most brilliant engineers I've ever met. He sometimes might be kind of grating, but the town is lucky. You can't get a bad plan past him."

But despite having dedicated members, the board, which also counts Chris Ford, Terry Atherton and William Good as its elected members, needs a full-time professional on staff, according to Moore. The board has been using the services of part-time Town Planner Elizabeth Harrington, and Moore successfully lobbied to have the position expanded to full-time as part of the fiscal year 2002 town budget. "Town government is getting more sophisticated, he said. "This volunteer-part-time board needs a professional on staff nowadays."

Brown and Pratt, the candidates seeking to replace Atherton, agreed with Moore on the demand for increased professionalism of the board.

"The bottom line is that people are willing to spend more and more to develop less and less valuable land," Brown said. "When big money is at stake, people will go to court rather than accept a 'no' answer."

Pratt added. "I think Al Moore is right that developmental pressures, such as sprawl, that face us really demands some level of professional staff, and depends on the return to master planning so we can preserve and protect the reason we all choose to live here."

SPRING HAS SPRUNG

Hello Cohasset. I hope that everyone has enjoyed the peek of Spring that we had. As I write this week's column, I do not know what the weather will do today and hope that it goes away fast! It is certainly time for us all to start looking for and growing those beautiful Spring flowers and cleaning up the mess that winter left behind in our yards.

SCHOOL BOARD CANDIDATES

An invitation has been extended to all interested people to join the PAC/PSO open forum with the School Committee Candidates on Monday, April 2 at 7:30 p.m. in the Osgood Music Room. Mark DeGiacomo, Pat Martin and Adrienne MacCarthy will discuss issues and answer your questions. This is great chance to learn about each candidate before you cast your vote on Saturday, April 7.

KITCHEN TOUR

Tickets are now on sale for the South Shore Community Center's annual Kitchen Tour. This year, there are five distinctive and festively decorated Cohasset kitchens and dining rooms set for Friday, April 6 from 10:30-3 p.m. As with past tours, each of this year's homes will spotlight formal and informal tablescapes by the homeowners or area professionals, as well as tempting treats by some of the South Shore's finest caterers. Funds from the tour are used to support the programs of the South Shore Community Center.

ART AWARDS

Three Cohasset students were recently recognized for their artwork that was submitted to the Boston Globe's "Scholastic Art Awards" program. The awards ceremony was held at the John Hancock Hall in Boston on Feb. 10 of this year. This program is an annual statewide competition to recognize top artistic talent in the areas of painting, sculpture, computer graphics, textiles and mixed media, with selected pieces going forward to a national competition in Washington, D.C. The three students honored each received Honorable Mention awards and should be very proud of themselves. They are: Abbey Coakley, junior; Laura Genello and Alicia Laas, both seniors. Congratulations girls on your wonderful achievements!

ELECTION SUPPER

The Annual Election Supper will be held on Thursday, March 29 at 6:30 p.m., at the Beechwood Congregational Church. This is an opportunity for those running for town offices to be introduced. LIBRARY CORNER

New artist

Judy St. Peter, whose artwork is on display at the library, interprets her subjects with playful use of color, texture and line.

Cohasset resident Judy St. Peter is currently featured as Artist of the Month at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. St. Peter began her artistic career as a commercial artist after attending the Art Institute of Boston where she majored in graphic design and an interest in fine arts. She worked for several printing companies as a designer and layout artist and also freelanced.

St. Peter primarily concentrates on acrylic painting after experimenting with several other mediums. Her focus on abstract elements creates interesting pieces through movement and energy in her paintings. "Instead of just painting what I see, I interpret my subject with playful use of color, texture and line."

Currently a gallery artist at the South Shore Art Center, she has received recognition from local exhibits and one-woman shows. St. Peter's paintings are on display through April 25 at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Substance abuse

Do you ever think to yourself, "Why doesn't someone do something about it?" The corner store is selling to minors. Your teenage daughter tells you that the seniors plan to drink all night after the prom at someone's house, and the parents say it is okay. Now you have an opportunity to learn how to make a positive change in your community. "Community First Steps: Strategies for Preventing Alcohol & Other Drug Use Among Youth" has 17 different methods for creating strong, safe communities. The resource manual was produced by the Massachusetts Prevention Center, a program of Mount Auburn Hospital Center for Community Health in Cambridge. A copy of the manual is now available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

The manual, funded by the Mass. Dept. of Public Health Bureau of Substance Abuse Services, is an easy-to-use format with complete strategy descriptions, outlines for implementation, resources and helpful hints. It includes "how to's" for getting people involved, running productive meetings, fund-raising, working with the media and evaluating your success.

You can also find the manual at the Prevention Center library at 552 Mass Ave., Suite 203 in Cambridge. Call the center at (617) 441-0700 to reserve a copy of the manual or for help with implementing any of the strategies.

Internet tutoring

Individual internet tutoring sessions, taught by local volunteer Jim Benedict, begin on Monday, March 26 from 9 a.m. to noon at the library. Pre-registration is required by calling the library at 383-1348.

Cohasset Village Community Workshop

Monday, March 26 @ 7:30 pm

St. Anthony's Church Parish Center - 129 South Main St.

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, in partnership with the Town of Cohasset Village Revitalization Task Force, is sponsoring the fourth in a series of five community workshops to develop designs for infrastructure, circulation, and streetscape improvements in Cohasset Village. The workshop will be held on Monday, March 26 at 7:30 pm at the St. Anthony's Church Parish Center.

The Cecil Group, urban landscape design consultants, will review various design alternatives for new sidewalk and crosswalk dimensions and materials, a one-way travel pattern in the Village, reversing the existing parking configuration on Depot Court, changing some of the parking along S. Main St. from angle to parallel, improve parking and circulation in the rear municipal parking lot, and providing pedestrian-scale lighting and other forms of streetscape amenities.

The design ideas presented at this workshop are a culmination of the public input received, land survey information completed, and the work of the designers at The Cecil Group. The goal of this workshop is to reach agreement on some of the options, refine the existing ideas, and formalize a community consensus on definitive aesthetic, circulation, and safety changes to the village infrastructure.

Preliminary designs and ideas are on display at the CRC office located at 87 Elm Street (across from Kimball's). Office hours are Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday from 10:00 am – 4:00 pm; Tuesday 12:00 – 8:00 pm.

Traffic solution

We have to agree with Ted Gledhill, Sarah Kidder, John Hertig and Ben Bixby — 7 in the morning is just to early to play "dodge 'em" with vehicles and pedestrians in the middle-high school parking lot.

The scene before school almost resembles a game of bumper cars, although thankfully, at this point there have only been near misses. The crux of the problem is impatient parent drivers who opt out of the long line of "SUVs" waiting to drop their children off at one of the school's doors and then, cut through the lot with no intention of parking there. These parents wreak havoc as they go against traffic, when they try to exit the parking lot.

The school committee warmly received the seniors' plan to improve the traffic flow at its meeting last week. School administrators are working with the students to iron out the details, which once finalized will be shared with student drivers and parents.

At first glance, we wondered why so many parents are driving their students to school when there are buses available. But, as school committee member Mark DeGiacomo says, the early morning ride provides some one-on-one time for a working parent to spend with his or her child.

Sarah said before she started driving, her father always drove her to school for that same reason.

The other reason for not taking the bus is with classes starting at 7:20 a.m., many teens would have to catch the bus as early as 6:40 a.m. And those extra minutes at that hour in the morning can mean a lot.

But no matter how you may feel about parents driving their kids to school or teens who want a few extra minutes of sleep in the morning — the new traffic flow pattern at the school will be an improvement over the current situation.

Thanks, Mrs. Cantelmo

As Marilee Cantelmo said back in 1998 — moving a house is hard but can you imagine moving a 70-year-old school? Mrs. Cantelmo can imagine that because she lived it.

Under her leadership, the move from the old to new Osgood schools was a smooth one. And anyone who's moved into a brand-new house knows there are lots of little and not so little "punch list" items that need attention. A new school is no different, except it's 10 times larger and the punch list considerably longer. During all the upheaval, Mrs. Cantelmo still handled all the other duties that go along with being principal of a K-3 elementary school including management issues, reams of paperwork, grant writing and overseeing 500 kids and dozens of staff.

Last week, she tendered her resignation and has decided to pursue other challenges in the education field.

We wish her well and thank her for five years of dedicated service to Cohasset schoolchildren.

The railroad and nuclear energy

TO THE EDITOR:

Last week the Mariner included an insert, paid for by an anti-train group, detailing the considerable health hazards of emissions from diesel engines and from coal burning electric generating plants. The insert made little or no mention of the health hazards of burning gasoline in vehicles, or of burning oil or natural gas to produce electricity.

Solar, wind, biomass, and other renewables may be relatively clean. But they are not going to provide the massive amounts of energy we need for transportation and electricity generation, no matter how much money,. tax incentives and wishful thinking is directed at them. Conservation only modifies the supply requirement; it doesn't replace supply. (So far, whatever has been achieved in electricity conservation has been almost exactly offset by ever-new uses for electricity, by increased use for air conditioning, and by switching to electricity in industrial processes).

The long term answer, increasingly recognized in many pragmatic European and Asian nations, is electricity generated by nuclear energy. We must set aside such false mantras as "no known solution to disposal of nuclear waste", and recognize that the Three Mile Island accident demonstrated the safety that can be achieved with nuclear energy, not the opposite. (Chernobyl demonstrated the fecklessness of the Soviet system, rather than that nuclear energy can't be safely exploited).

Well, I'm all for the railroad, even if it begins with diesels. Best to establish a working system without delay, before the cost becomes even greater, and electrify it later. The perpetually full parking garages on the Red Line, and our increasingly clogged highways, surely demonstrate that alternate public transportation is desperately needed. Boats aren't going to make much of a dent in the growing need, nor does substituting buses for automobiles seem to be more than a feeble stop gap.

In the long run, electrified rail is the ideal answer. In the long run, nuclear energy is going to be our major energy source for generating electricity, so we'd better start learning the facts about it, and dismiss the nonsense that has been our fare for some years...But there isn't electricity to spare at this time for the railroad, and we certainly shouldn't be generating it with fossil fuels, nor kidding ourselves that we will get it from wind, solar, fermented garbage etc.

If the environmentalists can face reality and lean on the anti-train crowd, maybe we'll get moving toward the ideal answer: electrified rail served by nuclear-electric generating plants..

Communication links

TO THE EDITOR:

At the March 15 School Committee meeting, Ted Malvey, Superintendent of Schools, announced that he had formed a "Superintendent Communication Links" forum. This group is comprised of parents who represent all of the schools in Cohasset either via the PSO, School Council or the PAC. The first meeting was held on Tuesday March 20, and it seemed appropriate as an extension of this communications link to share the meeting with the public at large.

The first topic of discussion, which is always near and dear to every parent's heart, was the school calendar for 2001/02. The first day of school for next year is Sept. 5. This naturally led to the question of when the last day of school this year is — assuming we have no further snow days! It will be Friday, June 22, and no, the Commissioner of Education has not granted any waivers because of the statewide state of emergency during the last storm!

The proposed budget for 2001/02 was the next topic. Since this is well documented, there was little discussion. For those of you who feel the need for extra detail, please contact the Superintendent's office for a complete copy of the budget package. One of the components of the budget is the Middle School sports program. This program will be the subject of many discussions in the future, and I encourage all parents to familiarize themselves with the proposed "no cut" policy vs. the intramural policy that is also being discussed. Either Ron Ford or Dr. Michael Jones can answer specific questions you may have regarding these proposed programs.

Next up, the building renovations for Deer Hill and the Middle/High School. Again, these topics are well covered in the press. Some dates of interest, though, are the proposed completion for both projects. The anticipated completion for Deer Hill is December 2002, while the Middle/High School project is not slated to be completed until December of 2003—more likely it will be the early part of 2004.

Ted also mentioned that he has formed a Transportation Task force to look into all transportation issues as they relate to the Cohasset Public Schools. This group is comprised of both teachers and parents, and they met for the first time on Monday, March 19. Their charge is to look at what we should be doing with regard to transportation issues in the future. Should we provide more transportation? Less? Their recommendations will, I'm sure, be of great interest to all parents!

For the next school year there will be a number of positions open in the school district. All of these positions will be posted within the schools. Outside advertising will be placed for some of the open positions as well. If any parents are interested in participating in the search for the new elementary principal, he/she should contact one of the School Committee members.

We then had a general discussion that revolved around changes in the schools as a result of Ed Reform. It became clear that there is a great deal of misinformation and confusion surrounding Ed Reform. A suggestion was made that perhaps some kind of fact sheet be mailed to all parents summarizing the highlights of Ed Reform. Given the discussion we had, this certainly seems like a worthwhile effort!

In closing, I think all who participated in this forum found it tremendously informative and beneficial. Thanks to Ted for suggesting it and implementing it. We'll continue to share all the information with as many people as we can, and in doing so we hope we'll come up with topics for future meetings.

Article 7 opposed

TO THE EDITOR:

Article 7 in the Annual Town Meeting Warrant is an attempt to fundamentally change the character of our future Meetings. Since before the Revolution, in fact as far back as 1715 any 10 citizens in the Towns of Massachusetts could place a matter before the Annual Town Meeting for discussion and vote. Special Town Meetings are usually called to deal with financial issues and other unforeseen business of the Town. To keep to the narrow focus of Special Town Meetings 100 signatures are required to place a matter before the town. There is no reason to adopt the restrictive rules of Special Meetings and apply they to our Annual Meeting forevermore.

Article 7 will diminish the right to petition government. If this law was in place the Mendel Road citizens would not be tied into the sewer system, the Church Street resident would still have the large tree blocking his driveway, the Doane Street bridge would still be in need of repair, a large area of the Town would still be zoned for commercial landfills. Alumni Field at the High School was built because a 10 Citizen Article passed Town meeting. A 10 Citizen Article passed the Town Manager position over the objection of the then Selectmen. Ten Citizen Articles keep the elected officials responsive. It is a major undertaking to obtain 100 signatures. Our Town would have less justice if citizens concerns could not be resolved as they have for generations.

Our Town Meeting Moderator, George Marlette, does a fine job of moving the meeting forward. There are Rules to fairly limit debate including the right of any person at the Meeting to "Call the Question" a procedural method of formally ending debate and voting the question. Article 7 will deny access to justice to some, and diminish us all.

Please vote No on Article 7.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

For selectman: Are concerns about private business interests being involved in plans to revitalize the village justified?

SELECTMAN/Tom Callahan

No. I don't see anything wrong with engaging in a public-private partnership. If we can get assistance from private parties we should not reject it out of hand. I am also comfortable with the arrangement since all proposals to date cannot be done unless the Town is in agreement. In my book, there is no automatic entitlement simply because private money is being spent.

I believe the village and harbor areas could use improvement in appearance. That these would benefit the private business proponent is logical, or they wouldn't be proposed. That doesn't bother me if the exchange brings benefit to all village and harbor merchants and the Town as a whole. Some appear resistant to any change whatsoever. Realistically, though, I don't think we need fear becoming a Newport-like destination. But I also don't think it is the end of the world if we have first class businesses and physical appearance in the village and harbor that reflect that we are a town that is relatively well-off, geographically blessed and otherwise physically attractive.

I also believe, though, that a public-private partnership is and should be a two-way street, a true partnership. This has not happened so far to the degree I'd like to see. This means that the quid prop quo should be a greater town input in the design, use and appearance of adjacent properties of the proponents, beyond that of mere permitting. Improvement of these areas of Town cannot be done in a vacuum.

SELECTMAN/Merle Brown

No. Why should it be? Nothing can be done without town meeting voting on it. This is not an uncommon thing, it happens in a lot of towns. I think it is great that these people are willing to take the initiative to get involved.

Planning board: Are concerns about private business interests being involved in plans to revitalize the village justified?

PLANNING BOARD/Peter Pratt

Yes, I certainly believe that citizen concerns about the influence of private business interests in the village revitalization process are legitimate. Given my own strong concerns, I was one of many signatories on last fall's citizen petition addressed to town officials on these issues.

Under our democratic system, none of us should ever hesitate to publicly try to influence governmental decisions, nor be surprised when others in business and private life do so. What is surprising and troubling however is the degree to which the developmental agenda of the town has come to be set by private interests. Development interests will always prevail when the Town does not advance the larger public interest.

Business took the lead in village planning because the town had failed to do so for over 35 years. Expansion of the Red Lion Inn proves that our bylaws should allow for Town purview over historically significant buildings outside of the Common district, and that our licensing and permitting powers need to be better coordinated. The MBTA has demonstrated our lack of a fiscal and legal strategy to protect Town owned open space. Commercial development in the harbor shows the need for a new harbor management plan that speaks to land based impacts. Our sewer projects and Title V septic advances compel us to update our subdivision control bylaws.

I seek the open seat on the Planning Board in an effort to help reassert the primacy of the Town in setting our developmental agenda.

PLANNING BOARD/ Richard Brown

Village revitalization is a very timely controversial proposal. No doubt, the Town has become a bit tired over the years. Yet, no one wants to see it turn into Disneyland north.

Changes in the central area of Cohasset will affect both residents and businesses. Each should have input into formulating plans for any changes. Our downtown businesses are generally fragile, with few exceptions. Residents are worried about sweeping changes that will dramatically alter the character of Cohasset. Thus, both business and residential inputs must be successfully blended if the project is to go forward. Keep in mind, no work at all can be done without the approval of the Town and its voters. Thus, the voters have ultimate control.

School committee: What do you see as the benefits of MCAS testing?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Adrienne MacCarthy

I believe that the current level of debate does not diminish the fact that there are a number of benefits to having a program such as the MCAS tests administered on a regular basis. The MCAS tests provide us with an objective gauge of how well our children are learning the current curriculum. If properly used, the MCAS test results can point out areas in need of improvement, whether these areas pertain to an individual student, teacher or encompass a larger problem with the curriculum.

I am a firm believer in the value of a quality public school system and the equalizing role it plays in our society. Prior to the MCAS tests, there was no real mechanism in place to insure all of our schools were adequately teaching the state mandated curriculum. As a result, there were some school systems in our state graduating functionally illiterate children. When the public school system fails a student, it also fails our society. A student should not be short-changed on his or her education because they do not live in an affluent community. The MCAS tests can insure that every student graduating from a public school in this state has a certain level on knowledge and skill by holding the schools accountable for their students performance. The MCAS tests are not perfect and they continue to evolve, but there are numerous benefits to be derived from such a program.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Mark DeGiacomo

The MCAS tests were established to insure that all Massachusetts students are taught the same high quality curriculum. Another goal was the elimination of the practice in some school districts of graduating seniors who had not achieved a reasonable proficiency level. Although these are laudable goals, not surprisingly the implementation of such a vast new program has run into several bumps along the road. The Department of Education is continuing to struggle with issues such as which subjects should be taught at which grades and how to decrease the number of hours that are taken out of the school day for testing.

Recently, the MCAS strict graduation requirement has received quite a bit of publicity. While I do not oppose the inclusion of a modified graduation requirement, I believe more accommodations need to be given to students with special needs and students for whom English is a second language. Exceptions also need to be made for students who would otherwise be well qualified to receive a diploma but who cannot pass the MCAS, no matter how often they try. I believe that the graduation requirement should be temporarily suspended until these very serious issues can be worked out. Denying these students a high school diploma would be detrimental not only to them but to society as a whole.

If necessary changes are made, I believe the MCAS can fulfill the vision of the drafters of Education Reform and be a positive vehicle for change in schools throughout the Commonwealth.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Pat Martin

As a testing instrument, I see MCAS as having several benefits. First, it allows administrators to determine how well individual schools have adopted the state mandated curriculum frameworks imposed on districts several years ago. Second, the test can indicate how well teachers have done implementing the curriculum into the classroom. And third, MCAS can assess each students competency on a particular subject area or on even a single question. This type of feedback is very helpful as it allows schools to focus attention at the specific area needing improvement.

With the current administration that's in place at both the state and federal level, it's clear high stakes testing is here to stay. Through continued lobbying efforts, however, school committees like Cohasset's have successfully pushed the state to make improvements. For example, this year testing will be spread out among grades resulting from expressed concern regarding the intensive time demand on the 4, 8 and 10 grades. In response to unique issues of special needs students taking the test, the state has required individual assistance for students on IEPs.

In our FY2002 budget, the School Committee has included additional MCAS tutorial help as well as computer software in an effort to address areas targeted for improvement and assist students who need extra help preparing for the tests. Although some may continue to argue that MCAS are not at all beneficial to little avail, we will use it as a tool to achieve another measure of excellence in our schools.

Next week's questions

For selectman candidates: What can selectmen do to improve relations between police and some members of the community who think the police are too tough on teens?

For planning board candidates: Given your druthers, what would you envision for the former Webb-Norfolk site on Rte. 3A?

For school committee candidates: Although only the bottom line of the school budget is approved at Town Meeting, does the school department have a moral obligation to spend the budgeted line items as presented to voters and not move money around?

Answers must be received by 5 p.m. Monday. Responses, which must be no longer than 250 words, may be sent by e-mail to mford@cnc.com, sent by fax to 7441-2931 or dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. For more information, call Mary Ford at 741-2933. Candidates, who are opposed or unopposed are welcome to submit photos and formal announcements of their candidacies. The Mariner will also publish a candidates' corner that is limited to a few lines (about 150 words) from any candidate who wishes to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers and the like.

Geographic name game

When I was growing up, I distinctly remember a country in Europe called the Irish Free State. Somewhat later, it became Eire and then Ireland, which it is called today, except by romantics who still think of it as Erin, as in "Erin Go Bragh."

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

There was a country in Africa called the Belgian Congo, which became independent as the Congo, then Zaire, then the Republic of the Congo to distinguish it from the next-door Democratic Republic of the Congo, which used to be known as the Middle Congo when the French were in charge.

My brother served our uncle in an area that came to be called the China-Burma-India Theater. They couldn't call it that today. But China-Myanmar-India somehow doesn't have the same ring to it. The natives seem to like it though.

And they say our kids do poorly in geography. Nonsense. It's just that the map won't hold still long enough for them to learn it.

Even the Commonwealth of Massachusetts is getting into the act.. What used to be the Martha's Vineyard town of Gay Head is now the town of Aquinnah. That's just the town. The colorful headland remains Gay Head.

The state of Maine is busily rounding up all its place names in order to replace the word "squaw" with the word "moose" so as not to offend the Native Americans. Hence, Big Squaw Pond will become Big Moose Pond and Big Squaw Mountain will be Big Moose Mountain, although the ski development will still be Big Squaw Mountain Resort.

The community of Boystown in Nebraska has quietly become Girls and Boystown, Neb., although the title of the old movie starring Spencer Tracey and Mickey Rooney will remain the same.

Most of the changes in the map have followed a change in the political winds.

Leningrad, named for the communist revolutionary, reverted to the old designation of St. Petersburg, named for the tsar who founded it, when the Russians overthrew the Soviets in 1991.

Likewise, Stalingrad, site of the climactic battle of World War II, became Volgograd the same year, although its original name was Tsaritsin prior to the coming of the Reds.

The city of Saigon in Vietnam was renamed Ho Chi Minh City as soon as the Americans and their allies left. When I first looked at a map back in the '30s, the whole shebang — and Cambodia and Laos, too —was know as French Indo China.

The Chinese capital city was known as Peiping back then. Later it became Pekin and now I see they call it Beijing. The Indians (the real ones, not the Native Americans) have changed the names of best known cities, Calcutta to Kolkata and Bombay to Mumbai.

Don't chuckle.

It wasn't that long ago when the PC crowd wanted to change the name of the town of Amherst to something else, anything else, because the colonial soldier for which it was named was mean to the Native Americans.

And the city of Lynn was giving serious thought to changing its name to Ocean Park so that people couldn't chant "Lynn, Lynn, the city of sin" any more.

Early spring birding — some surprises and some treats

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

The month of March

Sports writers write of March Madness. "Beware the Ides of March", wrote Shakespeare. William Cullen Bryant wrote a poem, describing March as follows:

The stormy March has come at last,
With wind, and cloud, and changing skies:
I hear the rushing of the blast
That through the snowy valley flies.

Many New Englanders complain about March and early April being the worst time of year. Certainly our weather has been quixotic the past few weeks. Many birders consider March to be a less than exciting month for birding. After all, the weather is windy and chilly, the winter birds are leaving, and the best of migration is yet to begin. But wait! There are some interesting things to look for.

The first to arrive

Have you seen the flocks of grackles that started arriving from the southern states in February? I saw my first Turkey Vulture of the year on Feb. 11. Red-winged Blackbirds are also early spring arrivals. Many people think that seeing a robin is the first sign of spring. In actual fact, we have robins around here all winter. Not as many as there will be later on, it is true, but some flocks hang on. What do they eat? It is not easy to find worms in winter, so they change their diet to include berries. This ability to adapt their feeding habits enables them to survive the winter without having to migrate farther south. Some of our winter robins have migrated here from points farther north.

The new spring look

Perhaps you have noticed that American Goldfinches are looking blotchy as they turn bright yellow again. I am often asked where the goldfinches go in the winter. The answer is that they stay here, but molt into such drab grayish plumage that they are easy to overlook. From now on they will be hard to miss. If you have spent time looking at winter ducks on the ocean, you are probably familiar with the Horned Grebe, a small black and white diving bird with a distinctive black cap. Try looking for them near the causeway on World's End before they leave for their breeding grounds in the Arctic. If you are lucky, you may catch the metamorphosis into the rufous neck, black throat, and bright yellow ear patches of breeding plumage. How's that for a totally new look? Even European Starlings go through some striking plumage changes. The white tips of their winter feathers become worn and disappear, turning this often-unloved bird into a glossy greenish-black beauty.

Some leave, others arrive

Winter birds are still here, but will gradually leave, as the strong southerly winds encourage them northward. The variety and number of sea ducks will be less, with the Red-breasted Mergansers and the Buffleheads among the last to leave. Some of our feeder birds will also leave, such as the Dark-eyed Juncos, White-throated Sparrows, and American Tree Sparrows. The next new arrivals will include Eastern Phoebes, Tree Swallows, Killdeer and Osprey.

What's that song?

Already there is more bird song in the air as the breeding season approaches. I hear cardinals and Mourning Doves regularly now. The Black-capped Chickadee is a tricky one, though. Its "Chick-a-dee-dee" song is easily recognized. But listen carefully. The chickadees are beginning to sing their springtime song, a clearly whistled "Fee-bee". The first note is higher than the second note. This is a good time of year to bone up on identifying birds by their voices. While there are fewer different songs in the air, try to identify every song you hear. Later, when migration is in full swing, this will make it easier to sort out the familiar from the unfamiliar.

Courtship behavior

Blue Jays, always flashy, noisy and aggressive, become downright raucous in the spring as they join together in flocks. These flocks are made up mostly of males who follow a lone female leader as they fly around, trying out their entire vocalization repertoire. After forming pairs, though, and during nest building and egg laying, Blue Jays become very quiet and stay out of sight. Ducks begin going through some amazing courtship displays, even before leaving for their more northerly nesting grounds. Watching these contortions can be a lot of fun. Before long it will be time to witness the remarkable aerial displays of the American Woodcock at sundown.

Don't give up on early spring birding. With less going on, it is a good time to concentrate on the details and get really well acquainted with certain species. You never know when you will encounter something unusual and unexpected, making your birding outing truly memorable, and March not such a bad month after all!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Taxing concerns

MR. MICHAEL BUCKLEY
DIRECTOR OF FINANCE

The Annual Town Meeting Warrant advises that a Proposition 2-1/2 override will be necessary this year and that it is coming a year sooner than previously projected. In addition, the Town Manager projects an average tax increase of $466.40 for the average home, or $6,302.40. Such an increase (8 percent) is "huge" by any measure and I am under the impression that annual tax increases will continue to escalate far more than inflation rates.

Before Town Meeting votes on Article 3 (the Operating Budget), I respectfully ask that you present a handout to attendees with the attached information.

The information is requested because the Town Meeting Warrant needs to be supplemented by information about the accuracy of past budget projections and the prognosis for future budgets as well as their impact on the average tax for the typical Cohasset home.

Editor's note: Mr. McElroy included an attachment with his letter to Michael Buckley asking for five years of historical financial data and a five year financial projection.

Youth basketball

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Recreation Commission wishes to thank the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club for another fine Basketball Program and season.

Special thanks to Don DeMichele, president and treasurer of CBBC, for his magnanimous effort overseeing the hundred of details of this operation. Also, Kevin Crough, who coordinated the grades 1 to 3 clinics, should be thanked for all of his time and efforts overseeing the clinical program.

Gratitude is extended to the many parental coaches and grade coordinators for their interest, efforts and time.

Gratitude is also extended to Ron Ford, Athletic Director at Cohasset High School, for his effort, time and support of this and other recreational programs.

Recreation-Boosters Basketball serves over 350 youngsters in grades 1 to 8 and is demonstrative of what can be produced by a community effort, reflecting the best interests and needs of so many children.

Accessory dwellings

TO THE EDITOR:

Having just read through my recently-delivered warrant for town meeting, I am writing to express my sincere opposition to Article 21, the so-called Accessory Dwelling article.

I'm sure that the proponents of this article will tell us that its primary purpose is to help out some of the house-rich, cash-poor seniors in our community who truly are having a hard time making ends meet on their fixed incomes. There are three principal points I would like to make:

First, Article 21 really does nothing to help our seniors who are in this predicament;

Second, this article has the potential to cause more harm to our community than anything I've seen in the seven years in which I've lived here, which far outweighs any potential benefit to the handful of seniors who might take advantage of Article 21; and

Third, it is apparent that the real purpose of Article 21 has little to do with helping out our needy seniors, but is in reality an end-around our zoning by-laws to allow for spot zoning of multi-unit housing in single-family neighborhoods throughout our community.

As to the first point:

Proponents will tell us that seniors who have owned their homes here for many years are unable to afford the escalating property taxes which have resulted from increased property values and ever-higher tax rates. No question, this is a problem for those on meager, fixed incomes. I personally know individuals in this town for whom this is an issue. But we already have a mechanism to help them out, namely, the laws which allow for low-income seniors to abate their taxes and/or to defer payment of taxes in their entirety until there is a transfer of the house. (Incidentally, 14 seniors in our community presently take advantage of the property tax deferral law.) I've heard it said that to take this course of action somehow is demeaning to our senior citizens. I don't quite understand why that is. I only will say that if our seniors are looking for help with their property tax payments, there is a very simple process already in place which does not involve this proposed wholesale change in our town's zoning bylaws which has the potential to negatively and adversely affect everyone's quality of life and property values (including those same senior citizens.)

I've also heard the argument that seniors do not want to pass on the costs of their deferred property taxes to their heirs. Pardon my exasperation on this point, but let's consider the simple reality: The heirs will be the beneficiaries of a huge windfall when they inherit the property, on which the deferred property taxes will be a truly insignificant sum when compared to the years of appreciation of the real estate. The taxes may go up by a few hundred dollars each year, but the property value increases by tens of thousands of dollars. This is truly a non-sensical argument in support of this article.

In addition, where are these supposedly cash-strapped seniors supposed to get the huge sum of money - at least $30,000-$50,000 for a new kitchen, new bath, code-conforming electrical and plumbing, and code-conforming second-egress alterations - that it will cost to renovate their homes to provide for a separate apartment? Am I missing something here?

As to my second point, we have to ask ourselves, both individually and as a community, what the implications of Article 21 will mean. Consider the following provisions of this proposed by-law:

Section 15.2(5) requires that there must be an off-street parking space for each bedroom—which means that lots of green space in backyards in our town will now have to be black-topped to provide for the required parking. I'm sure none of us had a clue that some day we might be living next to a mini-parking lot when we bought our homes;

Section 15.2(6) asserts that the exterior of the structure may not be altered, except for outside stairways, which are required under state law to provide a second means of egress for an apartment. The statement in this section that the "appearance of the house is to remain that of a one-family dwelling," therefore, is absurd on its face. There will be a tenement-style fire escape on the side or rear of every home which converts to a multi-unit structure, which will be far from aesthetically pleasing;

Section 15.2(1) and the body of the by-law refer to the "primary owner" and the requirement that the primary owner also be a resident. Common-sense and common experience tell us that these provisions will be utterly unenforceable for all practical purposes- which is to say that absentee landlords of these converted multi-units dwelling will become the norm, rather than the rule, not too many years out, once these properties start transferring from the original owners; and

Section 15.2(16) purports to limit the number of such structures to no more than 10 percent of the housing stock. I'm not a particularly big fan of "foot in the door" arguments, but I will say this: In every community in which I've lived, the attempt to put "limits" on things inevitably crumbles within a few years - and before you know it, there are no limits on anything. In addition, courts routinely overturn such limitations as being arbitrary - and let's face it, what is the justification for 10 percent versus 15 percent, 25 percent, or 50 percent? None that I can see on the face of this bylaw. Far less than 10 percent of the homeowners in this town are senior citizens who need the benefit of this article. Ten percent of our seniors may need help, but they constitute a very small percentage of homeowners. So why is there this 10 percent figure, which bears no relation to the reality of the problem which Article 21 purports to solve? Could it be that real estate developers, for whom Article 21 is a wide-open door, are just itching to start converting many of our large, single-family homes into small apartment buildings?

Moreover, without even considering the hypotheticals, 10 percent is not an insignificant number. If this by-law were utilized to full capacity, it would have a dramatic impact on the look of our community and could affect every neighborhood—including our historic village district.

That brings me to the third point, which is this: If this by-law truly is designed to help our present-day senior citizens, then why are so many provisions obviously geared to successorowners who presumably will not be senior citizens?

For example, Section 15.2(6) discusses the size of the accessory unit. But what it does not limit is the number of accessory units in a structure (at least none I could find.) Thus, a 3900 sq. ft. house could become the home of three, 900 sq. ft. apartments plus the 1200 sq. ft. "owner's unit." Further, why should the special permit envisioned by the by-law be transferable if the purpose of this by-law, from everything everyone has said about it, is solely to help out our cash-strapped seniors? I think it is clear that the proponents of this article have a bigger agenda, and that is to increase the amount of affordable rental housing in our community.

And you know something? They are absolutely correct. We do need to address this issue for the sake of the many seniors, and others, who presently call Cohasset their home and who would like to stay here, but who are unable to afford to do so.

But Article 21 is not the way to go about it. We can do both—find affordable housing for our seniors and others, and maintain the integrity of our single-family neighborhoods - if we have the will to do so and if we are willing to be creative. Norwell, for example, is addressing this issue without making wholesale zoning changes.

Article 21 however, falls far short of both goals. It is a short-sighted, ill-conceived solution to the problem of affordable housing with far-reaching consequences. This Article does nothing less than destroy the fabric of our present zoning by-laws—which ultimately will have a serious and detrimental affect on our quality of life and property values.

Lobster Lab

TO THE EDITOR:

As a supporter of Kevin Ulmer's efforts to establish a marine research and educational facility at Cohasset harbor, I was disappointed to learn and read that the Selectmen are collectively so frustrated with the "Lobster Lab" project that they decided to terminate his lease if he doesn't raise $326,000 and begin construction work by Oct. 1. The Selectmen's action, I fear, just might prove to be the first step taken towards throwing the baby out with the bath water.

Although critics of the project undoubtedly welcome the Selectmen's actions, I would like to remind readers that the project represents much more than just one answer to the question of what is to be done with the town-owned Haggerty House on Parker Avenue. The project represents the potential to address a variety of town issues and to meet a host of town needs. Readers of the March 15 edition of the Mariner must certainly have seen this potential embedded in various articles. In numerous ways, this one edition of the Mariner made it manifestly clear that the town of Cohasset would be well served by a marine and environmental research facility.

The article "Town waits for tidegate answer" essentially reveals that engineering decisions that will affect both the life of the salt marsh and the property of abutters to James Meadow are on hold due to a lack of data for salinity and water levels in James Meadows. Data for such a project can be properly collected, recorded, and even analyzed by students working out the Lobster Lab; monitoring data will be needed for a lengthy period of time even after professional engineering recommendations are acted upon by town officials

"Save the Watershed," editorialized the Mariner, education, environmental stewardship, and citizen involvement were the three main vehicles by which residents could use their "power to turn things around." If a hue and cry for watershed stewardship is sounded, don't we need an educational facility to answer this clarion call to environmental education?

No less than three other environmental articles either sounded the alarm for significant environmental education and change or spoke eloquently to the power of experiential education. Al McDonald's "The environmental crisis as a moral dilemma," along with Jim Shipsky's "Natural View" and Amy Whorf McGuiggan's "Common Ground" so clearly spoke to the need for an environmental education center for teaching stewardship.

Next week's question (this week's answer) for the School Committee candidates: "What do you see as the benefits of MCAS testing." As a teacher at the high school, I can tell you that the curricula damage wrought by MCAS far outweighs the benefits one might be pressed to list. (State imposed MCAS frameworks and state imposed requirements on Time and Learning have brought about the demise of several successful academic programs; ninth-grade humanities, tenth-grade American studies, business education, traditional woodworking, and the Alternative School are a few of the casualties.) But let's assume for the sake of argument that MCAS is a wonderful assessment tool. A nationwide study of 40 U.S. schools that use the environment as a context for learning reports that students in such schools compare favorably on standardized test scores to students not enrolled in such programs. (State Education and Environment Roundtable report; "http://www.seer.org")Will the students (and residents) of Cohasset not be well served by additional opportunities to practice and gain skills in science, technology, math, English, and, civics? Might these additional opportunities possibly result in improved MCAS scores? There's no guarantee, of course, but isn't it desirable to create the opportunity?

If the Selectmen have not been satisfied with progress made by Oct. 1, I fear that the voices which have advocated tearing the building down will prevail. Such a drastic course of action will certainly bring finality to discussions about the building. But, the best that can be said of such action is that it will provide for a few additional parking spaces, thereby minimally increasing the town's ability to accommodate day-boating residents on the few peak weekends of the summer. Which will add greater value to the town of Cohasset, expanded parking at the harbor or a marine and environmental education center serving the educational needs of the residents and the scientific needs of the community?

LWV workshop

TO THE EDITOR:

The Hingham League of Women Voters thanks everyone who attended our recent workshop on "How to Run for Office" at Hingham Town Hall. The meeting was open to residents of Hull, Cohasset, Scituate and Hingham. We had a great turnout. Our guest presenters, Tim White and Donald Hussey, told their personal stories about what it takes to run for local and regional office. One of the League's missions is to educate citizens about voting and the political process. What better way than to run at the local level? Even U. S. presidents started somewhere.

The League plans to sponsor a workshop again next year, albeit earlier to meet Cohasset's nomination filing date.

Community Preservation Act is good for Cohasset citizens

MY VIEW

DEBBIE COOK

Passing the Community Preservation Act on April 7 is making an investment in Cohasset's future. This Act would help us to preserve and protect the things that we love about Cohasset —scenic vistas across salt marshes, woodlands to walk our dogs, historic properties, the harbor, the village — so much that is uniquely special about Cohasset.

If you think, like so many do, that Cohasset really won't change — that it is all built up — well the facts say otherwise. Currently there are 2801 households in Cohasset. It is estimated that there is room for an additional 1,036 households, which is a 50 percent increase! Under our current zoning most of these households would be single family houses, which would be built on the estimated 1551 acres of developable land.

And this kind of residential growth costs. Study after study shows that residential growth costs a town more than it takes in from property taxes. For example, in 1992, the American Farmland Trust conducted a study of Massachusetts' towns that concluded that for every dollar the Town raises in residential property taxes, it costs $1.16 to provide that home with services, including water, fire protection and schools. In 1998 Andover conducted a similar study which concluded that every dollar Andover raises in residential property taxes, it spends $1.06 providing that home with services.

So I'd like to make an economic argument for passing the Community Preservation Act, which is basically we can pay a little now or a lot more later. And in the scheme of things, the cost really is nominal. For example, the 1 fi percent surcharge Cohasset is asking for would amount to $66 on a $400,000 house — compare that to a dinner out at a local restaurant. Furthermore, low and moderate senior citizens are exempt from the surcharge altogether when they apply for the exemption and the first $100,000 of each property's valuation is exempt.

Through the Community Preservation Act we would be able to raise $200,000, which can be matched by the state up to $400,000. We don't have to spend this money all in one year — we can let it build up or we can even borrow in anticipation of receiving the funds if we need to act quickly to purchase a special property. And the Act doesn't last forever, in five years we can vote to repeal it.

The window of opportunity is now. Each year that passes leaves less land to acquire for open space or ball fields. Senior citizens need help now with affordable housing. Funds to preserve and protect our historic properties are sadly lacking. The Community Preservation Act will help in all these areas. Make an investment to preserve what we love about Cohasset, and vote for the Community Preservation Act on April 7.

Debbie Cook is chairman of the group, Citizens for the Preservation of Cohasset.

Even a rainy Monday couldn't dampen the enthusiasm of Cohasset Sailing Club's new commodore Bob Deutsch.

New commodore takes the helm of sailing club

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Bob Deutsch has always been a sailor and growing up helped captain several vessels in races as part of the South Boston Race Club. Now the Cohasset resident and Belmont native will try to lead the Cohasset Sailing Club for the next two years.

"I love sailing, I'm absolutely passionate about it," said Deutsch, just days into his term as the club's new commodore. "It's just a part of me."

Deutsch is replacing Chuck Peterson, who stepped down after five years at the club's top position.

"I think this is going to be a very exciting transition for the sailing club," Peterson said. "Bob has been an asset for a number of years. Not only does he bring a love of sailing, but a fresh new perspective to the leadership of the club.

Peterson said Deutsch, 51, would bring new blood to the club's races and instructional programs. "When I was first in, I was in tune with the kids and now Bob is going to bring back that facet to the club," he said. "In that sense, he'll rejuvenate the club."

"I love sailing, I'm absolutely passionate about it...It's just a part of me."
— new Cohasset Sailing Club commodore Bob Deutsch

Deutsch has an 11-year old son, Evan, and Peterson said it's important to have a person in charge with children, who are peers with the rest of the youth involved with the club.

"I would have done it forever, but it was time for the club to make a change," Peterson added.

But Deutsch isn't going to stop with the younger members of the club. A member for 11 years, Deutsch hopes to improve the boat instruction curriculum and boost the instruction available for adults.

"One of the things we've done is hire more experienced summer staff, which assures a higher quality of instruction, and we're doing the same at the adult level," explained Deutsch, who promised to serve as commodore for only two years. "Past orientations have been primarily for children and the adult program has been somewhat second fiddle. We hope to bring the adult component on par with the children's."

Deutsch likened the sailing club to the Community Boating program on the Charles River in Boston. "We're not exclusionary like a private yacht club," he said. "Some think it's part of the town recreation committee and that's not true. We're a private, non-profit club that relies solely on its annual membership and private contributions." The club boasts about 230 Cohasset residents as members.

The club employs a paid staff in the summer, and Deutsch said he hopes to keep the instructor-student ratio down.

Since founded in 1960, the Cohasset Sailing Club has seen 8,000 town children come through its doors.

"We put 160 kids and 40 adults through the program each summer," said Peterson, who has been with the club for 15 years. Deutsch counts ten, 16-foot Mercury sail boats, three 420s and a "small number of turnabouts" among the club's collection. He said a good number of kids have gone on to race in college.

As commodore, Deutsch will be in charge of maintaining the club's docks, running the educational programs, and organizing any sailing meets or regattas the club participates in.

Peterson said the biggest thing Deutsch needs right now is volunteer help.

"It's paramount to keep the program effective," he said. "Volunteerism has always been there, but you can never get enough." Peterson counted a "core group" of 20 volunteers but added, "the club really needs 40." Deutsch said he expects to have his leadership team finalized in the next couple of weeks, in plenty of time for the start of sailing season in May.

Peterson is confident Deutsch is up for the challenge. "It means good things for the Cohasset Sailing Club, and good things for the kids," he said. "Bob's going to do a great job."

Stars of the Week

Meredith Bixby, Kristin Sheerin and Carly Carter. These three Cohasset girls were named to the Mariner All-Scholastic Gymnastics team this week. The best news of all, though, is that these three will all return to compete for the joint Cohasset-Norwell gymnastic team next winter.

Gymnasts improve by leaps and bounds

Young Cohasset- Norwell squad will look to improve on 2nd place finish next season

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

All things considered, this was a remarkable season for the Cohasset-Norwell Gymnastics team.

Between the settling in of a first year coach, multiple injuries to their All-Star captain and an absence of seniors, it seems a wonder the girls team wound up second in the South Shore League with an impressive 6-2 record.

First year Skipper-Clipper coach Cara Cunnerty, who previously coached at the varsity level for Norwell High School, was pleased with the progression of the young squad as the season unfolded.

"Even those who didn't compete really improved their skill level," reported Connerty, a native of Norwell. "We saw a lot of progress."

The team seemed to like their new coach, who had some large shoes to fill after replacing long time coach Ruthann Ardizzoni.

"We had an awesome time with Cara," said junior captain Carlie Carter, smiling. "She has a lot to offer us."

Ardizzoni did help out as an assistant for the C-N squad.

Due to the absence of graduating seniors on the team, the Clip-Skip juniors, All-Stars Kristin Sheerin and Carter, were forced to step into the leadership role as captains.

"We are friends, so we work well together," said Sheerin of the comaraderie of the two captains.

"Even those who didn't compete really improved their skill level. We saw a lot of progress."

Norwell-Cohasset gymnastics coach Cara Cunnerty

"If you work hard, others will work hard too."

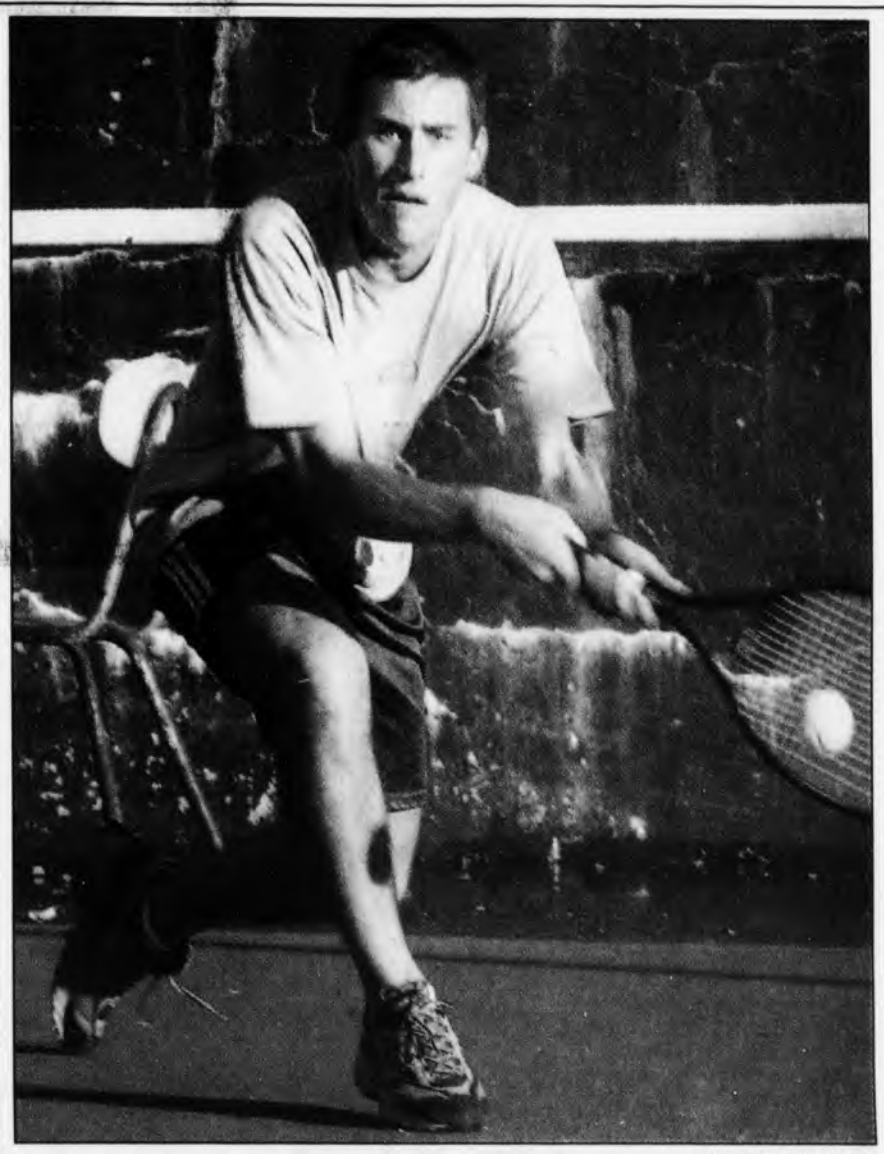
Sheerin was selected to be a South Shore League All-Star for the fifth straight season, dating back to when she was a seventh grader.

"It is still fun every year," said Sheerin.

Sheerin highlighted the regular season by breaking the only event record at Cohasset High she did not already hold by scoring an 8.9 on the vault. In the post-season, she then re-set her own school record in the All-around, by receiving a 35.65 in the high pressure atmosphere of the All-League Meet to take place first.

"My favorite part of gymnastics is competing," said Sheerin. "I like to rise to the occasion."

Sheerin even went on to State competition, where she was seeded ninth overall, and finished seventh in the vault.



Though Sheerin competes year round at Ellis in Braintree, she has said that the lifestyle of Olympic driven gymnasts is simply not for her.

"I would not want to work it to the point where I don't like it," said Sheerin, who has seen a glimpse of what that is like, competing in club competition against athletes who work out upwards of 25 hours a week even in the off-season.

Carter, who competes year round with Sheerin at Ellis, was selected to her third consecutive All-Star team in the uneven bars event.

Needing at least four official scores to even be considered for All-Star selection, Carter just made the cut with exactly that many performances due to her

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Varsity Ice Hockey Team recently held its annual Break-up and Awards Banquet at Atlantica overlooking beautiful Cohasset Harbor.

The banquet marked the end to the 2000-2001 Varsity Hockey Season which ended with a record of 8-10-2. Missing the State Tournaments by one game was a disappointment but one that has made the team even more determined to qualify next season.

Mike O'Connell, father of sophomore Greg O'Connell and General Manager of the Bruins, spoke to the team, encouraging them to continue to raise the bar and increase their expectations and "to push towards those higher expectations in working to meet their goal of qualifying for the States next year." He also offered to assist the team in meeting their goal by assisting Coach Walsh in working with them in as many practices as he can attend next season.

The CHS Hockey Boosters continued the long standing tradition of presenting graduating senior players with engraved watches as a memento of their varsity years on the ice. Senior Captain Dan Morse and Jay Rasmussen were presented their watches by Coach Dennis Walsh. Coach Walsh also presented first-year goalie Dan Kinchla, a junior, with a framed picture of him protecting the net during one of the Skippers games.

Coach Walsh announced the new team leaders for the 2001-2002 season. Chris Caron, Eric Libby and Peter Whoriskey will act as captains for the Skippers next season.

Coach Walsh also presented several other awards as part of the events of the evening. Senior Dan Morse was presented with the "Norman Delaney Award." Norman Delaney was the original founder of the Hockey Boosters in the 70's. In Mr. Delaney's honor, his friends established this award to be presented to a senior player who exemplified leadership and achievement in academics as well as athletics. Mr. Delaney's son, Matthew Delaney, was present at the banquet to present the award with Coach Walsh.

Freshman defenseman Mike Devine was presented with the "Barney Robinson Award." Barney Robinson played for Cohasset High School in the mid-1960's. This award is the unsung hero award recognizing extraordinary effort and accomplishment on the ice.

Coach Walsh said "Mike is a quiet kind of guy who is always one of the

Cohasset's Sheerin, Bixby and Carter named among area's elite

The 12 gymnasts you see honored here are the ones we determined through research and personal observation to be the top overall wrestlers in Marinerland (i.e. Abington, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Kingston, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Rockland and Scituate).

We determined early on, with our area's wealth of gymnastics talent, that the best way to do this was to acknowledge four for their outstanding overall performance over the course of the season, and then also name two gymnasts for their levels of excellence in each of the four individual gymnastic events.

Kristin Sheerin - All-around
Junior - Cohasset

The junior was the dominant All-around performer in the Pilgrim Conference 2 this year, leading the Cohasset-Norwell team to a second place season (6-2)... She won the All-around individual competition in each of the team's eight meets this season... won the league meet All-around with a score of 35.65, the best mark posted in the league this season and re-setting her own school record... averaged 35.4 in the all-around for the season (8.675 on bars, 9.05 on floor, 8.65 on vault and 9.025 on beam)...Pilgrim Conference 2 All-Star...took seventh on the vault at the State Gymnastic Championships on March 10 with an 8.65. Unfortunately, a mishap on the beam cost her a shot at a medal in the All-around...trains at the Ellis School of Gymnastics in Braintree...Cohasset-Norwell Coach Kara Cunnerty: "Kristin is extremely dedicated to gymnastics and works hard year round. This is very important to her, and she's constantly working on improving her skills."

injuries. Carter sprained her knee in the third meet of the season, and then cut open her eye during warm-ups prior to a match-up against Randolph.

"That happened in front of everybody, and definitely shook up. . .the underclassmen," said Carter.

Fortunately, the team was able to gather its composure after their captain was felled. Sophomore All-Star Meredith Bixby, also of Cohasset, took over for Carter as the second All-around gymnast to help the 'Sclippers' to the win.

Carter tore her ACL in one of the final few meets of the season. Fortunately, the malady will not require surgery, and she should return to the lacrosse field within three weeks.

Bixby wrapped up the season in grand style filling in for Carter in the All-Around, and was selected to her second Pilgrim Conference 2 All-Star team to compete in the vault.

With the 6-2 record, good for second in the league behind perennially powerful Hanover, the Cohasset-Norwell fans are already looking ahead to next season with hopes of a league title.

Sophomores Katherine Coyne, of Cohasset, and Amy Maree and Laura Good of Norwell, all of whom competed in three events consistently this past season, will all be forces next year. Sophomore Sarah Dennis, who was unable to compete this year due to an ankle injury, will hopefully make it back to the mat next year.

Next year, the team is looking forward to receiving current eighth grader Nancy Durkin, and see a bright future for a host of talented seventh graders.

Several Middle School gymnasts (seen here) should step up to help the varsity squad next season. The Middle School team was captained this season by Nancy Durkin. The rest of the team was made up of Kate Carpenter, Caitlin Sanchez, Melissa Crawford, Lisa Spirito, Kesley Bell, Leigh Laugelle, Cassie Rosano, Alison Krupczak, Jackie Flint, Emma Weston, Katrina Reardon, Katherine Murphy, Carrie Muir and Christie Muir. All but the latter three are pictured here.

first on the ice at every practice and works to get the job done."

Coach Walsh and Assistant Coaches Ben Watson and Archie Rasmussen were presented with gifts from the team by this year's captains, Dan Morse, Greg O'Connell and Tim Straughn. Speaking for the captains and the team, Dan expressed their deep appreciation to the coaches.

Coach Walsh announced the new team leaders for the 2001-2002 season. Chris Caron, Eric Libby and Peter Whoriskey will act as captains for the Skippers next season.

Speaking for the Cohasset Hockey Boosters, Jo-Ann Pilczak reviewed the successful fundraising events for the season including the First Annual Holiday Raffle and the recent raffle of Bruins' tickets donated by Mike O'Connell.

This year's fundraising was so successful, the Boosters were able to continue to purchase team jackets, present memento watches to senior players, host a hockey clinic run by Russian Red Army Elite Hockey Team member Igor Gratchev, and sponsor a "Team Night Out" to a Northeastern University vs UMASS-Amherst game. The boosters were also able to partially fund the break-up banquet.

"We knew our fundraising goals were ambitious this year, but we pushed forward and we thank the players, parents, alumni and the townspeople and merchants who supported our efforts."
Cohasset Hockey Booster, Jo-Ann Pilczak

The winner of the Bruins' tickets raffle was drawn during the banquet. Joe Bouchard, father of junior forward David Bouchard and Social Studies teacher at the Cohasset Middle High School, was the lucky winner who will be sitting in premium seating on March 24 to watch the Bruins face-off against the Colorado Avalanche. Money raised from this recent raffle of Bruins tickets will be used to purchase either team hockey bags or team helmets at the start of next season.

"We knew our fundraising goals were ambitious this year, but we pushed forward and we thank the players, parents, alumni and the townspeople and merchants who supported our efforts," said Pilczak.

Pilczak went on to report that fundraising was so successful the Hockey Boosters have established a hockey scholarship to be awarded to the qualifying senior who has played for the Varsity Ice Hockey Team for a minimum of two years, including their senior year, and who is in high academic standing and has exemplified good sportsmanship while playing for the Skippers.

The scholarship has been named "The Coach Dennis Walsh Ice Hockey Scholarship" and this year $1,000 has been earmarked for this scholarship.

The Varsity Ice Hockey players, coaches and Hockey Boosters would like to express their sincere thanks to everyone who supported the team this season through donations and attendance at the games. Planning is already underway for the 2001-2002 season!

Goalie Dan Kinchla had a fantastic season between the pipes for the Cohasset High hockey team, made all the more remarkable by the fact that he'd never even played high school hockey before this season. Needless to say, the junior is expected to be a force for the Skippers next season.

Playing bridge has its benefits

who exudes enthusiasm about the game, points out that competition is what makes it fun. It's also well documented that bridge is especially good for senior citizens, he says.

"There's a social aspect of it," Wennerberg says. "They can meet new friends and form partnerships. They get out and move around and they crank their brains up something fierce because they have to."

On Monday, Wennerberg was teaching the finer points of "stayman," a bidding convention, to a rapt group of about a dozen in a "mini" lesson that preceded lunch and the game. For $5, participants get the lesson and for $3 more, they can have lunch and stay for the game of duplicate bridge. In duplicate bridge, as opposed to party bridge, all players play the same hand at some point.

Chris Murray, who comes from Scituate with her friend Jeanette Nothern to play, says there are no excuses in duplicate bridge.

"You can't say I didn't have a good hand and that's why I didn't do well because the same hand gets passed around," she says.

Kay Lincoln of Cohasset says she's played bridge for a number of years but is still learning.

"I love learning some of the conventions I didn't know and didn't use."

Taking a more pragmatic approach, Bob Goldman says, "it's the only card game that you can really enjoy without playing for money.

"Every hand is difficult and it's challenging."

Wennerberg says the computer where he logs onto bridge websites helped him get back into the game. He runs several bridge clubs, including the one in Cohasset called "The Owl's Nest," and has discovered that food mixes well with the game.

"The first club I went to when I got back into the game, there was a nice layout of food and I quickly discovered people will go to the game where there is good food.

"So I decided to put on the best food in the area and I enjoy doing it," he says. Monday's menu included ham, seafood and egg salad sandwiches and homemade fudge for dessert.

"My classes eat well and enjoy a good, competitive game of bridge."

Wennerberg tallies the points on computer. The Cohasset game is sanctioned so players can earn their masters points, which signify a player's level and add up as they become more proficient.

It takes about two years to become a competent player.

"It's not like 'Go Fish' that you can teach in three minutes, bridge takes time," he says.

Bryanton, the CEA director, says Wennerberg's enthusiasm is catching. Since he started teaching at the Senior Center in September, the program has taken off.

"It brings me so much joy," she says. "The seniors go out happy, the make new friends and set up bridge groups on different days."

But to Wennerberg, the popularity of the bridge club is no surprise.

"Bridge is the most popular game in the world," he says. "It far outstrips monopoly and soccer because of the competitive aspect of it."

Crocker Lane land swap not part of town's mitigation requests

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen said Tuesday night that a possible land swap involving the town right-of-way and the former MassHighway garage on Crocker Lane was not included as part of the Greenbush mitigation package the town submitted to the MBTA last week.

But the board added, if the state wanted to propose the land swap, they would listen.

"It is open for discussion, but it's not part of our mitigation proposal," Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said.

The Mariner reported last week that Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan had told state Sen. Robert Hedlund that the state would be willing to throw in the land, which is slated to be marked as surplus land, to help sweeten the mitigation pot. But selectmen said they had some reservations about potential soil contamination at the site.

Selectmen have requested a meeting with Sullivan in order to try and etch out a deal, and though the secretary has agreed, no date has yet been set.

The town is also willing to consider a proposal to help it buy another piece of open space adjacent to one of the town parks.

The town was hoping to have a deal with the MBTA in place by mid-March, but talks, which had been fast and furious throughout the winter, have slowed down considerably since lead negotiator Kevin Dasey resigned in February.

Lot of headaches at CMHS

the East Coast.

"This conclusion, of course, is not derived from actual numbers, but rather the seemingly endless train of SUVs, minivans and station wagons that descend on Cohasset High School at the beginning of each and every school day."

The parent drivers, who are dropping their children off at either one of the two school entrance doors, are supposed to wait in line behind other vehicles along the school driveway that runs up the hill to the right of the lower parking lot. But the line often extends down the driveway and out onto Pond Street. So some impatient drivers take a short cut by going through the lower parking lot to drop their children off and then have to weave back through a sea of oncoming cars to exit the lot.

"Given the high volume of traffic in the parking lot every morning, collision is inevitable. The only unknown is who or what will collide, and what will become of them," the students wrote.

At least one school committee member understood the students' point exactly.

"I've almost been sideswiped a couple of times by people coming out of the parking lot," Stephanie Noble said.

The students are suggesting:

Σ Prohibiting those who do not intend to park from entering the parking lot from 7-7:30 a.m.;

Σ Allowing for only one drop-off location at the front of the high school, therefore reducing the number of early stops that slow the traffic flow and result in back ups on Pond Street.

Σ Buses would travel in the outside lane along the driveway; and parents would use the inside lane (closest to the school)

Hertig said the extent of the problem became evident when he and his fellow classmates started driving last year and experienced the traffic nightmare firsthand.

But encouraging more students to take the bus to school is not the answer, the students say.

Bixby explained that classes start at 7:20 a.m. That means many students have to catch the bus as early as 6:50 a.m.

"Many kids and parents find that unreasonable," he said.

Hertig pointed out that Cohasset is a small town making it convenient to drive. "I live on Lamberts Lane, about the farthest point away in Cohasset," he said. "I'd have to catch the bus at about 6:40 a.m." But, he said, a car ride would take less than 10 minutes.

When the students presented the plan to the school committee, member Mark DeGiacomo said parents often opt to drive their children to school in order to spend more time with them.

"A lot of us work all day and driving them to school gives us a few minutes alone to chat," he said.

DeGiacomo suggested a crosswalk should also be painted across the driveway near the stairs from the parking lot as an added safety feature.

The students, who are meeting with the school administration to work on the plan, said their classmates could be alerted through posters at the school, but there would need to be a mailing to parents.

Supt. Edward Malvey said the school committee supports the concept that something needs to be done and praised the students for bringing the issue forward. "There is merit to this," he said. "I think we can craft something that will work out."

Any fix will be temporary because the middle-high school will be refurbished. The $25 million plans include a new parking lot.

The expansion would create space for 814 casket burials and 1,000 urns and allow people to purchase space ahead of time. The proposed expansion, which has all the necessary permits and can start as soon as the money is appropriated, recently received further good news.

"Because we were able to get the Conservation Commission to approve a different kind of drainage plan, we were able to get an extra 175 grave sites and $150,000 knocked off in construction cost," Pratt said.

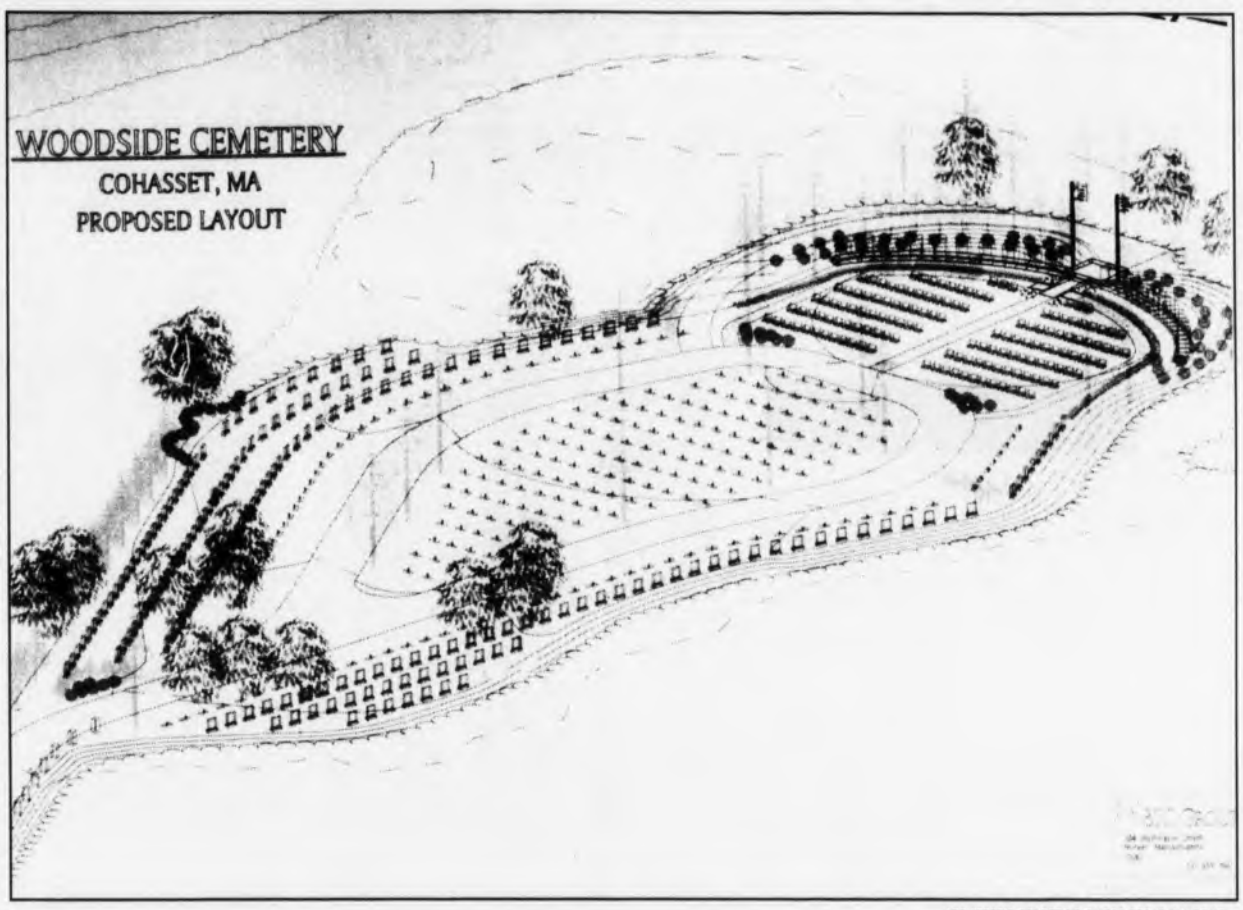
Construction will have no impact on the town tax base. Pratt said the $600,000 borrowed for construction will be paid off by plot sales. Once that is done, and all plots are sold, the town could earn $2 million in its perpetual care fund. "Once we get over the first hurdle of paying it off, it could be a huge money generator for the town," he said.

Money borrowed for cemeteries is usually paid off over a five-year period, but last fall, special Town Meeting voters authorized a home-rule petition asking the state for permission to repay the money over 10 years.The home rule petition is currently awaiting action by the legislature.

"The reason we had to do that is we didn't think we could sell enough graves over five years to pay off the debt, but when looking at ten years we could do it." Currently there are about 35 burials in town a year and 50 deaths.

The town began looking for a new cemetery site in 1986. Selectman Merle Brown said other sites had been looked at, but it came down to just expanding the Woodside site. "We looked at other areas, but they weren't compatible," he said. "So we started looking at Woodside and saw we could expand on the Route 3A side."

The expansion will have a section available for gravesites with stone markers at $1,850; gravesites with flat markers for $1,500; cremation niche for $2,500; and double-depth cement vaults for $3,500. Each cremation niche has space for two urns.



Interestingly, according to David Crispin of BSC Group, the project's engineers, Cohasset has a higher than average cremation rate, than other South Shore communities.

The cemetery will also have a memorial for the town's 21 Gold Star Mothers. "The ZBA [Zoning Board of Appeals] was concerned the expansion would look like a big, open ball field, and were talking about some sort of feature focal point," Pratt said. "So this got hatched up. We have a kind of informal veterans memorial committee that whenever these kind of things come up, gets resurrected and they came up with a memorial that commemorates mothers who lost their sons."

There will also be a flagpole and space for ceremonies.

Pratt said he would have the final bids in his hand when he presents the article before Town Meeting, and if approved, work could begin in June. He is looking at a Patriots Day, 2002 dedication.

The annual Town Meeting will be held on March 31, at 10 a.m. at the middle/high school Sullivan Gymnasium.

ARCHITECT'S RENDERING BY BSC GROUP IN NORWELL

Village workshop

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, in partnership with the Cohasset Village Revitalization Task Force, is sponsoring the fourth in a series of five community workshops to develop designs for infrastructure, circulation, and streetscape improvements in Cohasset Village. The workshop will be held on Monday, March 26 at 7:30 p.m. at the St. Anthony's Church Parish Center.

The design ideas presented at this workshop are a culmination of the public input received, land survey information completed, and the work of the designers at The Cecil Group. The goal of this workshop is to reach agreement on some of the options, refine the existing ideas, and formalize a community consensus on definitive aesthetic, circulation, and safety changes to the village infrastructure.

Preliminary designs and ideas are on display at the CRC office located at 87 Elm St. (across from Kimball's). Office hours are Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday from 10 am – 4 p.m.; Tuesday noon – 8 p.m.

Cecil Group engineer David O'Connor said the change would be based almost exclusively on safety concerns along the narrow stretch of Elm Street between Brook and South Main streets. O'Connor and Peter Briere of the BSC Group, said the only way to get sidewalks on both sides of Elm Street, keep the parking, and allow cars to pass through, would be to make it a one-way. O'Connor said, as an engineer, he would be unwilling to certify any plans without a sidewalk on both sides.

He showed the board pictures of cars parking up on the marked sidewalk in front of the Hingham Institution for Savings, and across the street.

Briere said businesses on South Main Street and Brook Street would benefit from the extra cars diverted in front of their buildings. He said the change would effect approximately 350 cars during the morning and evening rush-hours.

However Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan was concerned over the effect the one-way pattern would have on South Main Street businesses that rely on the northbound flow of traffic in the morning. He singled out especially French Memories and Tedeschi's as businesses which rely on commuters' morning cup of coffee, and how they would be affected if cars had to circle around the village.

He also questioned the need to have a sidewalk from the bank to Cohasset Hardware.

"To have a sidewalk, in back of a hardware store, that no one uses, is a ridiculous notion," Callahan said. Cohasset Hardware's main entrance is on South Main Street.

Callahan said he wants to make sure the effect the change has on businesses doesn't override the value of the "total discombulation" of the downtown area.

"Residents will get used to it, but I'm more concerned with the businesses, who can't shift around where they are," he said.

Selectman Merle Brown was among those in favor of a month-long test period for the traffic change. He said though people would initially hate the change, they'd get used to it. He used the four-way stop at Forest Avenue, King Street and North Main Street as an example. Brown said people were opposed to it initially but now they're writing letters saying its great and not to change it as part of the Greenbush mitigation package.

"People fight change. They want the town to stay the same as it was 300 years ago," Brown said, "If we want something, we have to try it."

Selectman Michael Sullivan said the change make deliveries easier, and should slow down traffic coming into the village.

Task force member Lucia Flibotte said she was against the change because of the potential bottleneck along Brook Street it would create.

However both Brown and Sullivan said bottlenecks exist on Brook Street already.

"I think it can be absolutely nuts there," Sullivan said.

Rizzo said the plan has been presented to Police Chief Brian Noonan and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, and neither rejected the plan outright. O'Connor said the turn from Elm Street to South Main Street, in front of the hardware store, could be made by a ladder truck.

O'Connor also proposed a number of village parking changes. He suggested switching parking across from St. Stephen's from angular to parallel. The benefit, he said, would be increased safety for cars backing out, and the need for less granite rock be chipped from the ledge for the new St. Stephen's walkway. Unfortunately, the number of parking spaces would be reduced,

However, the number lost would be made up along Depot Court, where O'Connor suggested switching the angular parking to the South Shore Community Center side of the road.

He also suggested a redesign of the Depot Court/Ripley Road intersection that would include a traffic island in the middle, and "sharper edges" along the streets to better define the intersection.

Rizzo said the village plan will be open for discussion at the CRC's next public forum, on March 26, at 7:30 p.m. at the St. Anthony's Parish Hall on Summer Street.

The Designing Woman by Kathleen Fox ASID

SUCCESSFUL DESIGN

You decide it's time to redecorate a room, but you really don't know where to start. Ask yourself first how the room will be used. Remember, FORM FOLLOWS FUNCTION. Itemize all the furniture pieces that you will need to reach your goal. Now you are ready to arrange the furniture in the room. Keep in mind that there should be a good balance of shapes, heights, and scale of pieces around the room. Be sure to keep adequate space for traffic flow. Once you have come up with a pleasing design, you can begin to talk about colors and patterns. I always feel it is helpful to find several rooms in design magazines that you really like. This will give you direction and help to visualize the completed space. Choose colors you like to live with, not something trendy that you will tire of. If adjoining rooms are not changing, then it will be important to coordinate colors and patterns for a good flow from space to space. Dominant colors in one room can be accents in the next, or an additional color can be added to the existing color scheme for the new space. Each room should have it's own personality, some of which will be defined by the function. Decide on all major selections, such as furniture, fabrics and wallpaper or paint before you place orders. Shopping piecemeal leads to mistakes. If something is discontinued, your whole plan could change, and items you have already purchased might not work.

If you need a professional eye to help put your rooms together, call the Designing Woman at (781) 383-6411. We can find unusual accent pieces and accessories to give your home a unique style. Mixing antiques with new, blending numerous fabric patterns and finding that perfect rug will give your home the style and personality you've been looking for.

Be sure to tune in to HGTV this Friday at 9PM for KITCHEN DESIGN. Kathleen Fox will give you a tour of her remodeled kitchen and breakfast room.

POLICE BRIEFS

Drug charges

Police charged two men with possession of marijuana following a traffic stop early Sunday morning.

Officer William Quigley made the stop at about 1 a.m. after activating radar that determined the motor vehicle was going 51 mph in a posted 35 zone.

After approaching the driver, Quigley smelled a strong odor of burning marijuana on the driver's breath. Police asked each of the five occupants in the car to step out of the motor vehicle, all were frisked and asked for identification, according to the police report. Further investigation revealed that the driver, Christopher W. Whitaker, 34, allegedly had a plastic bag with what police believe was marijuana in his possession. Passenger, Timothy Mogavero, 27, whose breath also smelled of marijuana, was found to have two marijuana cigarettes in his pocket. Mogavero also had an open bottle of beer at his feet.

Whittaker, a Medford resident, was charged with illegal possession of a Class D substance (marijuana). Police charged Mogavero with illegal possession of Class D and drinking alcohol from an open container in a motor vehicle.

The men were arraigned on the charges Monday in Quincy District Court. The drug possession charges against Whitaker and Mogavero were continued without a finding for three months, meaning if they stay out of trouble, the charge will be dropped at that time, Sgt. Robert Jackson said. Mogavero was found responsible but not fined on the open container of alcohol charge. Both men had to pay $135 in court costs.

Minors arrested

Police charged three minors with transporting alcohol after a routine traffic stop at about 1 a.m. Saturday.

Police could allegedly smell the odor of alcohol on each of the occupants at booking and found seven cans (two of them opened) and a 40 oz. bottle of Bud Lite beer inside the car.

Charged were Bridgit Chase, 18, of 514 Beechwood St.; James Figueiredo, 18, of 8 Margin Court. and Catherine Wenmark, 17, of 27 Riverview Drive. Wenmark was also cited for having an expired inspection sticker and operating a motor vehicle with defective equipment (brake lights stuck on).

At the arraignment, the charge against Wenwark was continued without a finding for three months. She had to pay court costs of $85.

The charges against Chase and Figueiredo were dismissed. The teens were put in a diversion program and will have to pay a $50 fee to MADD, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

THEATER REVIEW

Company Theatre's 'La Cage Aux Folles' sparkles

By. R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Billed from the outset as a big, old-fashioned musical, "La Cage Aux Folles" first took the musical theater world by storm during a pre-Broadway tryout at the Colonial Theatre in Boston in the summer of 1983. Based on the 1973 Jean Poiret play of the same name, "La Cage" featured music and lyrics by Jerry Herman and a book by Harvey Fierstein. From Boston, the play moved to New York where it won six Tony Awards including Best Musical and settled in for an almost five year run at the Palace.

Now through April 8 at Norwell's Company Theater, first-time and return audiences have an opportunity to see a visually spectacular production of "La Cage Aux Folles." Indeed, a virtual of sea of sequins, bugle beads and marabou feathers are helping to bring all the free-spirited joy and tawdry glamour of nightlife on the French Riviera right here to the South Shore.

It should have surprised no-one that Jerry Herman was behind this show. It was Herman after all who gave words and music to the larger than life women at the heart of the 1960s Broadway hits "Mame" and Hello Dolly!". With "La Cage," Herman was back on Broadway with another fabulous female, the indomitable Zaza. Actually, there was one little difference. Zaza wasn't really a lady after all, but instead the drag persona of Albin, a nightclub headliner in St. Tropez. Like Mame Dennis and Dolly Levy before her, Zaza hides a heart of gold beneath often outlandish behavior.

Indeed, a virtual of sea of sequins, bugle beads and marabou feathers are helping to bring all the free-spirited joy and tawdry glamour of nightlife on the French Riviera right here to the South Shore.

One of the most talked about elements of the original Broadway production of "La Cage" was the stunning chorus line of dancers, all in drag except for two. Their remarkably shapely legs became part of the show's mainstream appeal. Not surprisingly, the illusion is not maintained in Norwell. While the Company Theater deserves credit for hiring some actual drag queens for its "Les Cagelle" line, even they aren't enough to save the dance numbers from being more awkward than awe-inspiring. The always dependable David Good does his best with the naughty role of "Hannah from Hamburg," but is continuously betrayed by a whip that just won't crack.

STAFF PHOTOS/ALAN CHAPMAN

Les Cagelles strut their stuff in the Company Theatre's lavish production of La Cage Aux Folles.

Back stage Michael McAdam gets made up for his role as Phaedra in the chorus line Cagelles.

The leads here are strong, however, especially Michael Kreutz as Georges, the nightclub owner whose partner Albin/Zaza is also his headliner. Kreutz captures all of Georges' sweet-tempered warmth and fussy dignity. When he sings the heartfelt "Song on the Sand" to his partner, Albin, he is expressing sentiments of love and devotion that know no barriers. Watch and listen to Kreutz, and Christopher J. Hagberg as Albin, and you just may realize what life should be all about.

Hagberg plays Albin with an affecting vulnerability so touching that you may want to jump to his defense when he becomes the object of ridicule. Hagberg's acting helps provide the story with its emotional core. His flat singing voice is frequently under pitch and does the musical material few favors. The rousing anthem that closes act one, "I Am What I Am," should stir the soul and raise the roof off of the theater. In Hagberg's hands, the song will probably only get to you if you have heard it done before.

Harvey Fierstein was hot off his own "Torch Song Trilogy," when he was hired to do the book for "La Cage." He didn't add very much by way of smoothing out the rough edges of the original. When Albin and Georges learn that "their" son, Jean-Michel, is to be married, and that he wants his "parents" to clean up their act and make themselves presentable to his would-be in-laws, the musical suddenly accelerates before abruptly veering into a dance number. The odd interlude features not only Jean-Michel, but his fiancee and not one, but two paramours from his past. This bogus ballet seems as out of place now as it did 18 years ago.

Unfortunately, the visit by Jean-Michel's conservative future in-laws is a plot device that turns act two into little more than a French farce. The second act does, however, boast the buoyant, "The Best of Times," one of the musical's most "hummable" tunes.

The cast is clearly enjoying itself. Company stalwart John King is hilarious as Jacob, the high-strung servant. As young lovers, Jean-Michel and Anne, David Costa and Lauren Gemelli are an appealing duo despite a lack of any obvious romantic chemistry.

Musical Director Michael Joseph, appropriately attired in a sequin jacket that may be on loan from the Liberace Museum, ably leads a strong 18-piece orchestra through Herman's now familiar score. Zoe Bradford and Jordie Saucerman do everything they can to keep things moving with a large cast and many scene changes. Choreographer Sally Ashton Forrest would have done well to trim some of the dance numbers, or at least better tailor them to the abilities of her performers. Costume Designer Shirley Carney really steals the show, though, with some of the most lavish designs ever executed on a South Shore stage.

"La Cage Aux Folles" will be performed at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, through April 8. For tickets and information, call (781) -871-2787.

Singing for the boys and girls

Benefit concert features Avenue X

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

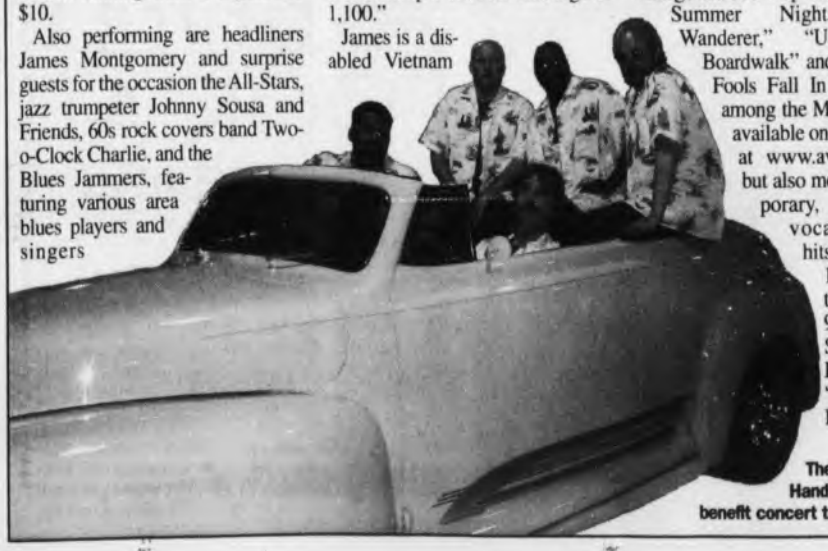
Avenue X, a local a capella group, will combine business with pleasure at Handlebar Harry's in Plymouth Sunday.

The smooth harmonizing quintet, which bills itself as Acapella Doo Wop...and Beyond, will highlight a day-and-evening-long benefit show at Plymouth's waterfront "Cheers"-style restaurant, pub and nightclub, located in Cordage Park. Proceeds raised at the event will go toward the Plymouth Boys and Girls Club a group for which Avenue X member Wes James sits on the board of directors. Tickets for the seven-hour benefit running from 2-9 p.m. are $10.

Also performing are headliners James Montgomery and surprise guests for the occasion the All-Stars, jazz trumpeter Johnny Sousa and Friends, 60s rock covers band Two-o-Clock Charlie, and the Blues Jammers, featuring various area blues players and singers including Jimmy Carreira, who organizes and hosts the weekly open-mike blues jam on Tuesdays at Handlebar Harry's. Emcee for the day is WATD-FM radio personality Liz Raven.

The Plymouth Boys and Girls Club currently plans to move to a new, larger facility in the town, from Miller Street to a location off South Street across from Mayflower Village. The Handlebar Harry's benefit date is one of numerous fundraising events for the Club taking place recently in the Plymouth area.

The Club has a whole host of new programs it would like to introduce," said James, "including not only sports, but also music, arts and theatre. And for all this, we definitely need a new facility with more space, especially now when our membership is at an all-time high of 1,100."



James is a disabled Vietnam veteran who's done community work in Plymouth, including serving on the Boys and Girls Club board of directors, for nearly thirty years. He noted that the Club's music program has in recent years produced its own blues band, which in 1998 won a national amateur bands competition and flew all-expenses-paid to San Diego to perform for standing ovation crowds. Last year the Boys and Girls Club group released an independent CD of old-school blues/R&B cover songs by James Brown, Santana, B.B. King and others as well as an original song about the plight of the homeless. Members of this band will be among the Blues Jammers at Sunday's benefit show.

The group's "Acapella Doo Wop...and Beyond" tagline denotes its typical live repertoire of not only vintage-era doo-wop classics ("One Summer Night," "The Wanderer," "Under the Boardwalk" and "Why Do Fools Fall In Love" are among the MP3 samples available on the website at www.avenuex.net) but also more contemporary, doowop/vocal-friendly hits from the 1960s through the 90s, such as Smokey Robinson's "Ooh Baby Baby," the Capris' "Morse Code of Love" and even such recent Adult Contemporary fare as Shania Twain's "You're Still the One" and Savage Garden's "Truly, Madly, Deeply." Avenue X adds the occasional original song to its set list as well.

"Our group first officially formed as Avenue X in 1998," said member Mike Kelby, the appointed spokesman of the group. "And from the beginning we've wanted to be creative with our repertoire, knowing that there are a lot of post-doo wop songs that are very compatible with the doo wop/a capella vocal style. This sense of adventure, I think, distinguishes us from other doo-wop nostalgia groups."

Avenue X keeps a busy performing schedule, playing an average of 75 dates a year at venues from Plymouth's Mayflower Restaurant to Boston's Faneuil Hall, the Cape Cod Melody Tent and Mohegan Sun resort while its members all have full-time day jobs. The group is already booked through summer 2001.

"One thing that always amazes and delights me about performing live is that people at the shows like the music no matter who they are, even teenagers and little kids along with the forty and fifty-something folks who grew up with the music. It's a very spontaneous reaction we get from audiences and they're always very supportive," Kelby said.

The local a cappella group Avenue X will cruise into Handlebar Harry's at Cordage Park this weekend for a benefit concert to support the Boys and Girls Club of Plymouth.

Home show goes botanical

An annual home show is making its way to the South Shore once again this year, but this time, it's got a new botanical twist.

The first annual South Shore Home and Garden Show will set up shop at the Marshfield Fairgrounds March 22, and will continue through March 25.

The garden show is merely an expansion of the South Shore Home Show, which was founded on the South Shore in 1999 by Kingston sisters Jill Daly and Kim Kelly, otherwise known as CED Promotions.

Home show organizers say that by adding a gardening component, the event "further satisfies a long-standing need for such a resource to South Shore businesses and consumers."

More than 100 South Shore businesses are taking part in this year's show.

The upcoming show will feature a number of 'botanically-related' subjects including creating your own gardens, and modifying landscapes. As always home show visitors can pick up dozens of tips for renovating and decorating their homes. Home decorating professionals will be on hand providing information on renovating bathrooms, kitchens and just about any other room in your home. Those in the market to build or buy a home can speak personally to builders, realtors and mortgage loan officers at the home show.

The South Shore Home and Garden Show will be open from 3-9 p.m. on March 22, from 2-9 p.m. on March 23, from 10 a.m. until 9 p.m. on March 24, and from 10 a.m. until 7 p.m. on March 25. Admission is $7 per person, $2 for children 6-12, and no charge for children under the age of six. For more information, call (781) 585-0017.

Weeknight cassoulet

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Cassoulet, the traditional French dish of beans and meat — usually pork, duck confit, and sausage — is cooked very slowly to allow the flavors to meld. It can be dry, heavy, and salty, but when prepared properly, it is juicy and succulent without being overbearing. The problem, of course, is that this dish is inordinately time consuming making it unsuitable for anyone other than an intrepid retiree.

The first step was to simplify the ingredient list and shorten the cooking time. Gone was the duck or goose confit and the long, slow simmering. Instead, I opted for quicker cooking chicken thighs (they stay moist even when overcooked) and Italian sausage. The first issue to resolve was how to prepare the beans. After some testing, I decided to pre-cook the beans and then build the finished dish. (Although overnight soaking does produce slightly plumper beans, the difference is marginal.) I wanted to infuse flavor into the beans during cooking so I added a small onion studded with whole cloves, a bay leaf, and salt to the cooking water. The cooking takes about 45 minutes —I wanted my beans very tender not al dente — but you can leave the kitchen while the beans cook.

For the chicken, bone-in, skinless chicken thighs worked best. I found that the skin becomes gummy during braising and that the thighs do not lose any moisture or flavor prepared skinless. I found that brining (soaking in salted water to add flavor and moisture) did not make much difference in this dish since the thighs are braised which infuses them with flavor.

I thought that the dish needed one more type of meat and I opted for pork. At first, I rendered fat from a few slices of bacon and then used the fat to brown the chicken and the bacon to garnish the finished dish. I then tried using sweet Italian sausage removed from its casing in place of the bacon; this was a major improvement since it added depth of flavor and texture, making the dish hearty and rustic.

The liquid I preferred was 1/2 cup of white wine and three cups of chicken stock. The water used to cook the beans had a taste which was overpowering and unwelcome and plain water didn't add enough taste or body. Additions which made the cut were onion, carrot, and a couple of tablespoons of tomato paste for flavor and color — actual chopped tomato seemed out of place. Finally, I added a bit of fresh rosemary during the last 10 minutes of cooking although you could try either fresh sage or thyme. The dish is garnished with a generous portion of chopped parsley.

QUICK CASSOULET

A word of caution about the beans. Do not undercook them. They will not soften much when cooked with the meat so they should be just shy of soft after precooking. There is nothing worse than half-cooked beans in this sort of dish.

1 pound great northern or navy beans picked over and rinsed

1 small onion peeled and studded with 8 whole cloves plus one medium onion cut into 1/2-inch dice

1 bay leaf

3/4 teaspoon salt plus additional salt for seasoning the chicken

1/2 pound sweet Italian sausage removed from casing and crumbled

8 bone-in chicken thighs, skin removed

Freshly ground black pepper

1 tablespoon olive oil

1 medium carrot, peeled and cut into 1/2-inch dice

2 cloves garlic, finely mined or pressed

1/2 cup white wine

2 tablespoons tomato paste

3 cups chicken stock

1 tablespoon chopped fresh rosemary

1/4 cup chopped flat leaf parsley

1. In a large saucepan combine the beans, onion studded with cloves, bay leaf and 3/4 teaspoon salt with 6 cups water. Bring to a boil over medium-high heat, reduce the heat to maintain a simmer, partially cover and cook for 45 minutes or until just tender. Discard the clove-studded onion.

2. Place a large Dutch oven over medium-high heat. Add the sausage and brown well on all sides, breaking apart any large pieces with a spatula. Remove with a slotted spoon and set on paper towels to drain. Pour off all but 1 tablespoon of fat. (Some sausage is very lean and may not render much fat.) Season the chicken with salt and pepper and brown well on both sides in batches if necessary. Remove and reserve.

3. Adjust the heat to medium and add the olive oil. Add the chopped onion and carrot and cook until soft, stirring occasionally, 5 to 7 minutes. Add the garlic and cook for an additional 2 minutes. Add the white wine and scrape browned bits from bottom of pan. Add the tomato paste and stir to combine. Drain beans and add them to the Dutch oven along with the chicken, sausage, and chicken stock. Bring to a boil, reduce the heat to maintain a simmer and cook, covered, for 20 to 30 minutes or until chicken thighs are cooked to an internal temperature of 165 degrees. Add the rosemary and cook for 10 minutes more or until the beans and chicken are very tender. At this point if the braising liquid is very thin, simmer uncovered for a few minutes more. Season to taste with salt and pepper. (Add liberal amounts of both.) Serve immediately, garnished with the chopped parsley. Serves 4-6.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, MARCH 22

The moon enters Pisces at 12:28 a.m. and interacts with Jupiter at 12:37 p.m. and Mercury at 3:08 p.m. Don't take on more than you can handle. Choose your words carefully. You may be tempted to overdo, overextend, make foolish promises. You can make headway with projects that need your imagination and creativity. On the other hand, avoid jobs that require mental focus and precision.

FRIDAY, MARCH 23

Stormy astrological weather arrives this morning. Be sure to start off with a positive, peaceful attitude. Others may be hypersensitive, temperamental, distracted. Take it slow and easy. The Pisces moon forms challenging alignments to Pluto at 6:53 a.m and Mars at 11:12 a.m. This is a day for cleaning up the clutter, reorganizing, preparing for new starts. Plan a quiet evening; get extra rest.

SATURDAY, MARCH 24

This may be a slow-starting morning. Allow extra time to get where you are going. Others may be moody, sleepy. The Pisces moon becomes inactive at 5:58 a.m. and travels at the tail end of the zodiac until 11:44 a.m. The dark side of a new moon is in full force and effect until 8:21 p.m., when the sun and moon conjoin at 4 1/2-degrees of Aries. Influences turn around completely after the new moon culminates, and a harmonious alignment to Jupiter sets the stage for late night partying. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SUNDAY, MARCH 25

The light side of an Aries new moon brings sunny astrological weather. Enthusiasm and energy run high. Be more adventurous; spur of the moment ideas get the green light. The Aries moon forms harmonious alignments to five planets today. In addition, an applying alignment of the sun and Jupiter prompts you to make long range plans, set new goals. New starts in your business or personal life are recommended.

MONDAY, MARCH 26

Get an early start to this day. You must initiate new projects before 8:10 a.m., when the Aries moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. The remainder of the day is prime for finishing projects already begun, handling routine chores and errands. The applying sun/Jupiter alignment continues to generate an optimistic, playful mood. Take extra time out for fun and games; enjoy favorite sports, hobbies, friends. At 8:51 p.m. a Taurus moon takes over.

TUESDAY, MARCH 27

This day has its challenges. The Taurus moon forms one major contact to a planet, a 90-degree alignment to Neptune at 12:12 p.m. That means that it may be difficult to focus on practical matters; others may be sleepy, careless, distracted. In addition, an applying alignment of Mercury to Pluto warns against signing important documents, making major decisions or launching new enterprises. Plan a quiet evening. Meditate for inner peace and clarity.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 28

A mixed bag of planetary influences makes for a day that can go either way. Let go of situations that are out of your control. Instead, zero in on duties, commitments you have made and follow through. Mercury aligns with Pluto at 1:28 a.m. A lunar alignment to Uranus is in effect between 1:57-4:57 p.m., warning you to be flexible in this period; projects may take unexpected turns. The sun forms a flowing 60-degree contact to Neptune, aiding all creative, artistic endeavors. At 11:29 p.m. the Taurus moon conjoins Saturn and becomes inactive.

Young people count rises

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset grew by 186 people in the past 10 years, said Census 2000 results released last week. But although that equals just a 2.63 percent rate, the number of residents in town under the age of 18 grew at a rate of 4.74 percent.

"We weren't as high as I though we'd be, but we still do have some growth," said Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan. "It shows we have a younger population stepping up, taking over from the older population.

Out of the town's 7,261 residents, 27.79 percent is under the age of 18, or one out of every four Cohasset residents is under the age of 18. Percentage-wise, Cohasset ranks 69th out of the state's 352 communities in residents under the age of 18.

New Hingham-based group rails against the train

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A new organization says the best Greenbush deal a town can get — is no train at all.

At first, it may sound like another grassroots attempt to derail the $408 million project — one that would likely fail given current momentum behind the train. But the force behind Advocates for Train Alternatives, dubbed AfTA, thinks Greenbush restoration is anything but a sure bet.

"I come in with a different perspective," said AfTA president, Hingham's John Bewick, about his tenure as state Secretary of Environmental Affairs under then Governor Ed King in the early '80s.

"My general principle as secretary was when a town was strongly opposed to a project — it didn't happen."

— John Bewick, former state Secretary of Environmental Affairs

AfTA is asking for an independent evaluation on Greenbush by a firm with no potential conflict of interest with the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority and one that would be overseen by state environmental authorities.

As the state's chief environmental officer — credentials that should wake up the dormant anti-train movement in his adopted seaside town — Bewick was no stranger state-mandated, environmental feasibility studies, known as EIRs, that are required for large projects.

"As secretary I reviewed a lot of EIRs," said Bewick, who charges the MBTA has crafted its Greenbush studies to deliberately skew the reports in favor of the train.

In its first anti-Greenbush volley, AfTA took its case to the people two

MBTA plans to use 'creative' financing to pay for Greenbush

Summer 2002 groundbreaking is possible

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Some might call it creative financing, others risky business — but the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, says it's the best way to put the $408 million Greenbush project on the fast track.

"I think it lends more evidence the state cannot afford it. They have to utilize a very novel, creative and nearly unprecedented method to fund Greenbush."

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth

The MBTA says it will pay for the train by using a plan called "design/build" where the contractor – in essence would act as the bank — designs, builds and pays for the project, and the MBTA then pays the contractor back over a period of years. Normally, for major capital construction projects, the MBTA would have to secure bonds for the money needed.

But under new restrictions from the legislature, it's not clear the MBTA could afford the debt service financing Greenbush in the traditional way.

The "design/build" financing strategy has only been used once in the state's history of capital projects — the Route 3 North widening project — and that hasn't been completed yet.

So not only do local elected officials think this funding strategy is "risky" because of its lack of history in the state, but say it is also further proof that the MBTA can't afford to build Greenbush..

"I think it lends more evidence the state cannot afford it," said state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said. "They have to utilize a very novel, creative and nearly unprecedented method to fund Greenbush."

"It clearly shows they don't have the capital resources to do a project of this magnitude," said state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham. "It's really the only other way to fund the project, from what I can tell, at this point."

But transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan and MBTA officials insist the MBTA can absorb the cost for restoring commuter rail service, and is only using the design/build method to put construction on the fast track. Yet Hedlund and Bradley are convinced that the MBTA doesn't have the money, as illustrated in a largely, ignored in a state-commissioned report released last year.

Sec. Sullivan authorized a blue-ribbon study of the effects the new

Uncertainty worries businesses along abandoned right of way

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Greenbush right-of-way slices Scituate, Cohasset, Hingham and Weymouth in half traveling through dozens of historic districts and business centers. Restoration of the Old Colony Railroad line will not only bisect village squares but construction will create months, even years of disruption to places such as North Scituate and Cohasset villages, Hingham Square, Weymouth's Jackson Square and Weymouth Landing. While the return of the train will be a boon to the commuter, local businesses along the long, abandoned tracks worry the huge diesel-powered engines will do more harm than good.

"A vibration once a day is one thing, but there's talks about 24 scheduled trips a day," says William Giarrusso, owner of Bowl & Board in Hingham Square. "I can't believe that it won't have some detrimental effects to this building and other historic buildings that abut this line."

As the Massachusetts Bay Transit Authority pushes ahead with the project — towns along the line are hammering out mitigation agreements with the agency. Hingham's

New water tank comes on line

Flushing to start April 16

On Wednesday, March 21, the new Scituate Hill Water Storage Tank went on line.

"The people of Cohasset now have improved fire protection," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission, "because of the additional fire reserve provided by this second tank. This $1,600,000 project was the biggest construction project for the Water Commission since the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant was constructed in 1978."

"This flushing program, while it will cause some short-term discoloration of water, will improve water quality, taste and odor, for all of our customers."

— John McNabb, Water Commission Chairman

"With the new tank on line," McNabb said. "The Water Commission is now able to start a regular flushing program for the entire water distribution system on April 16. This flushing program, while it will cause some short-term discoloration of water, will improve water quality, taste and odor, for all of our customers."

"The Water Department will also now be able to drain and clean the Bear Hill Water Tank, and remove the six feet of alum sludge from the inside of the tank," he said, "further improving water quality. We opened bids last week for this project, and received two bids which were under the engineering estimate of $400,000, allowing us to stretch our dollars."

The Water Department also opened bids last week for Phase A-1, which includes cleaning & lining pipes on Beechwood Street (Rt. 3A – Riverview Drive), Elm Street, and Summer street, and to replace undersized pipes on Border Street and Rustic Drive, said McNabb.

The Water Department is also replacing fire hydrants, and has replaced six pipes since January and plans to replace a total of 20 by

Osgood arts grant

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) and Debra Kennedy, chairman of the Cohasset Cultural Council, announced a grant of $250 has been awarded to the James Osgood School by the Massachusetts Cultural Council. The grant is part of the council's Event and Residency Program, which support short- and long-term residencies of artists in schools.

The grant will provide for a performance of songs and personal stories about immigration throughout history by Promised Land for second- and third-grade students.

"This grant enables children and teachers to participate in creative, hands-on learning situations with artists who have years of experience in school settings," Hedlund said. These dollars are critical to schools that are working to meet education reform requirements, and that understand the importance of arts in the curriculum."

The Massachusetts Cultural Council has awarded 133 Event & Residency grants totaling $212,312 across the state for projects to occur during spring, 2001.

Hedlund said the Education Reform Act of 1993 includes the arts as one of seven core subjects for Massachusetts schools. The Board of Education has approved an Arts Curriculum Framework providing school districts with guidance on how to integrate the arts into the classroom and the Event and Residency Program offers an important resource.

Accessory dwellings, cemetery on docket

Town Meeting is Saturday

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset residents will gather this Saturday for the 231st Annual Town Meeting, and debate a platter full of articles ranging from the annual operating budget to numerous town bylaw changes.

Starting at 10 a.m. with an invocation from the Rev. Jennifer Justice of First Parish Church, more than 30 warrant articles are slated to be discussed, including ones that would allow a limited number of accessory dwellings in town, increase the number of signatures needed for a citizens petition from 10 to 100, and a town budget, if approved, that would require a $300,000 override to be voted upon at next week's town election.

Although there may not be any articles that are poised to cause a major ruckus, Town Moderator George Marlette said the voters won't be able to be in and out in 90 minutes, like it was in last October's Special Town Meeting.

"There does not appear to be any particularly contentious articles," he said, adding there could be a number of resolutions from the floor to honor outgoing town officials. Marlette also said the meeting could be slow moving at first, due to town traditions such as the invocation, presentation of the town color guard, and a new tradition this year, a number of town committee reports.

Marlette said for the first time, recess for lunch will be dispensed with and the meeting will be extended until 6 p.m.

However, the meeting might be able to pick up time thanks do a new addition to the town meeting warrant: summaries of each article.

"Every year we try to make Town Meeting more informative, and last year we had several questions from people saying they don't understand what the article means," explained Town Manager Mark Haddad. He said in the town of Andover, where he grew up, the Town Meeting warrant used to include a summary of what the article was, and what it would mean if it passed, at the bottom of each article as printed in the warrant.

"It makes the debate more informative," Haddad said.

"I really think it will help the meeting move along," Marlette added. "People can read the article for themselves."

Once a quorum of 100 registered town voters is reached, Marlette said he will stop on each of the articles for debate. He normally had run down the list at the start of the meeting, and people could request an article be "held" for discussion. But opposition to this has led him to abandon the time-saving tactic.

"I was told by one citizen that he intends to put a hold on every article," Marlette said.

Marlette said will dispense will the lunch recess and will try to have everyone out of the Sullivan Gymnasium by 6 p.m. He will allow voters to bring food into the gymnasium. Officials are worried that if the Town Meeting adjourns until Monday, there would be a problem getting a quorum. He said unless there is a bunch of routine stuff Town Meeting can "plow right on through" to avoid coming back for a second session.

Some of the agenda's highlights include:

- the town's $25 million operating budget, and accompanying override if it passes (see related story)
- 13 changes to the town's general and zoning bylaws, including accessory dwellings
- the rezoning of the Hagerty Property off Parker Avenue, and of a parcel of land behind Stop & Shop Plaza off Route 3A
- authorization to spend $700,000 to expand the Woodside Cemetery, and an additional $80,000 to complete the construction of a town parking lot on the Hagerty property.

Health insurance driver behind $300K override

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

On Saturday, on the floor of Town Meeting, Town Manager Mark Haddad will present a proposed $25 million town operating budget – the largest in town history.

However, thanks to an 18 percent rise in health insurance costs, an increase in legal fees, and a large amount of accumulated overtime by the Police Department, the town faces approving a $300,000 override, or the possibility of tough budget cuts.

"When we first began to develop the budget, it appeared that we would meet out goal of maintaining services without an override," said Haddad in his Town Manager's Report included with the town budget article on this year's warrant. But in January, Haddad reported to Selectmen that the town's health insurer, Blue Cross/Blue Shield, would be raising rates 23 percent. That number was later knocked down to 18 percent, but the unexpected financial hit of $200,000 still loomed.

The town had expected to use $100,000 of free cash to offset any shortfalls in this year's budget, however that money disappeared through an increase in police overtime due to three injured officers, and an increase in legal expenses accumulated fighting the Mass-American Water Company's rate increase. Mass-American provides water service to North Cohasset.

Haddad said he and town Finance Director Michael Buckley looked for fat to trim from the budget, but wasn't able to find much. "Since all expense budgets in the municipal budget have essentially been level-funded over the past three years, there is little room to make significant cuts without reducing the delivery of services," Haddad said. "Our philosophy for FY-2002 was to provide a budget that maintains services. The only way to cut $300,000 from the budget would be to cut personnel and that would definitely have an impact on services."

Taking into consideration the normal 2 1/2 percent levy increase limit and the debt exclusion tax rate, the homeowner of a house valued at $400,000 would see his or her taxes increase by $460.80, not including the override.

If the override passes, an additional 22 cents per $1,000 would be added, or an additional $105 to that same house. In total, with the override, the tax bill of a house valued at $400,000, would increase from $5,836 to $6,302.

Interestingly, the tax rate is scheduled to drop from $14.59 per $1,000, to $13.13. Haddad credited this to a 20 percent increase in property values throughout the town.

The override is supported by both the Selectmen and Advisory Committee.

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said the fact the board voted to support the budget unanimously shows their support of the override.

The budget wasn't as warmly received amongst the Advisory Committee, where it passed 4-3.

Chairman Dick Avery said the committee found the budget fine "in essence but found some inflationary things troublesome." One item in particular calls for the $25,000 part-time Town Planner position to become a full-time, $48,000 position.

"It came down to maybe $100,000 out of a $25 million budget we would argue with, so that's not enough to stop it," said Avery. "We just wanted to sound some cautions."

If the budget is approved Saturday, the override will then appear on the ballot on next Saturday's Town Elections. The override needs a simple majority vote to pass at the polls.

Absentee ballots available for election

Absentee ballots for the Annual Town Election on April 7, are now available at the town clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noon on Friday, April 6, 2001, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only: bsence from the town during the hours the polls is open; physical disability or religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on election day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the town clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the town clerk's office by April 7, 2001 to be counted.

Vendors all in compliance in tobacco sting

The Board of Health announced that none of the tobacco vendors in town sold to minors under the age of 18 during a recent tobacco sting. "The Board of Health would like to extend its congratulations to all tobacco vendors in Cohasset," said chairman Stephen Bobo.

On March 19, the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program conducted a compliance check on local vendors.

"Not a single vendor sold to an underage youth," Bobo said. "And we just wanted to give them a pat on the back for a job well done." The goal of the "stings" is to ensure students are ID'd when they ask to purchase tobacco products.

The sting was part of an effort to enforce the state's tobacco sale, vending and distribution laws. No person under the age of 18 is allowed to purchase any type of tobacco product. However there are no laws prohibiting those under 18 from using tobacco. State law requires vendors to check the identification of any person who looks to be under the age of 27.

During the sting, which is conducted twice a year, an underage person goes into a store and asks for cigarettes. If he or she is turned away, the store is ruled in compliance and nothing further happens. If the store does sell, the minor and an adult health educator from the collaborative file a report and submit it to the local town board of health. Approximately 17 stores in Cohasset were checked.

In November, there was one violation in Cohasset.

Elect Adrienne MacCarthy
COHASSET SCHOOL COMMITTEE

Dear Friends and Neighbors,

I have enjoyed meeting and speaking with so many of you these last few weeks. For those of you that I might have missed, I wanted to take a minute to share my accomplishments and goals for the School Committee with you. As I have demonstrated by my 5 years on the School Building/Facilities Committee; where we brought the new Osgood School in on time and within budget and are now overseeing the $42 million Deer Hill, Middle/High School renovation AND as the organizer of the Friends of Cohasset Public Schools where I designed, funded and built two playgrounds in three years; I am a person who sets attainable goals and "delivers" on them.

I feel confident that I can help the School Committee to establish funding priorities, explore the full utilization of our schools and listen and respond to your concerns. I will make the same commitment to the School Committee that I have made to every other project that I have undertaken. I am prepared to make a full time commitment to the work of the School Committee. I will not disappoint you!

On April 7th, I would appreciate your Vote...

WHERE IS SPRING?

Hello Cohasset, where is spring? I do have flowers poking through in my yard although I think they are completely confused with the extra snow. I think that may be it for the year and now, spring is really here! Make sure to send in all the great news and photos of springtime events; birthdays, births, weddings etc. Make sure to get out and vote in the upcoming election, April 7.

NEW ARRIVAL

I would like to start this column by announcing the birth of a very special little boy. Camron Farrell Lindquist was born on Friday, March 23, 2001. Camron is the son of former Cohasset resident, Heather (Pietrowski) and Eric Lindquist. This little guy is so lucky to be surrounded by love and well-wishers. I know that Camron will be strolling around our town very soon and that everyone in Marshfield are delighted with his birth. Congratulations to all of you! As some of you may remember, I wrote about Heather's mom Bonnie Farrell who is recovering from a major year of illness. She is such a strong lady and has a store in Hingham, "Bonnie's Baubles." Make sure to stop in and say hello and congratulations on her new little grandson!

CANCELLATION

I have a note to let you all know about the PAC/PSO School Committee Candidates night that was slated for Monday, April 2. This has been cancelled and will not be rescheduled.

BIRTHDAY WISHES

Happy birthday to a wonderful resident of Cohasset. Mary Monteiro, of Stockbridge Streeet recently celebrated her 95th birthday! She enjoyed a special luncheon with friends, Chris Whoriskey, Betsy Good, Gitte Shea, Barbara Anderson, Penny Myles and JoAnne Chittick. Many happy returns to a beautiful lady.

WATERCOLORS

If you go and visit the James Library and Center for the Arts in Norwell, you can see a great collection of watercolors by Cohassets very own, JoAnne Chittick. Entitled "Other Lands, Other Shores," the show includes 40 impressions of the artists trips to Italy, Iceland and Greenland. Gallery hours are Mon., Wed., Thurs. and Fri. from 2-5 p.m.; Tues. and Sat from 10 a.m.-1 p.m. The show will be there until April 5.

MIDDLEBURY HONORS

Let's hear it for a bunch of Cohasset students who are excelling at Middlebury College in Vermont. Both Elizabeth C. Myers, daughter of Michael and Rhonda Corey Myers, and Theodore W. Noon, son of Nicholas and Constance Corvan Noon, were named College Scholars for academic excellence. A College Scholar represents the highest level of achievement in the liberal arts college.

Also doing really well are the following Middlebury students from Cohasset who achieved dean's list status, the second highest academic recognition at the school. They are: John J. Flanagan III, son of John and Deborah Flanagan; Margaret A. Goedecke, daughter of Peter and Jane Goedecke; Sydney J. Johnston, daughter of Robert and Diane Griswold Johnston; Cara E. McKenney, daughter of Brian and Monica McKenney, and Cragin P. Parker III, son of Cragin and Mary Parker.

Congratulations, all!

NO ESCAPE

Polly Doggett of Hugh Strain Road and her 12-year-old granddaughter, Hana Doggett, flew down to Bermuda to escape the recent blizzard. Instead it followed them. No snow, but tempest-like winds and rains for much of the week. Hana would have had more spring if she has stayed in Orem, Utah. Polly says her new flag-covered umbrella will make a nice souvenir.

KITCHEN TOUR

Tickets are going fast for this year's Kitchen Tour to be held Friday, April 6 from 10:30-3 p.m. At this printing, a limited number remain so act fast and don't miss out on the area's only house tour that specifically features kitchens. Early spring rain storm soaks town

Frozen ground causes flooding

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A slow-moving storm drenched Cohasset in four inches of rain in a 12-hour span last week, causing severe flooding problems along North Main Street, and forcing the street to be shut down.

"Domenic Tutela told me it was a 25-year storm, with a 100-year water run-off problem," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "Normally a certain amount seeps into the ground, but because the ground is frozen, it all ran-off." Tutela is the engineer for the town's James Brook flood control project.

Though Cohasset experienced acute flooding problems in low-lying areas, no area was hit worse than North Main Street, between the former Eastern Edison building and the King Street intersection. Three houses had to have the power cut as overflow water draining into Sanctuary Pond backed up across North Main Street.

Deborah Pitaro said by 6 a.m. she was forced to get her cars out of her garage.

"The water was as high as the wheels," she said. " It happened really quick. It can go really quick from one inch to three feet."

Neighbor Pat Powers said water started collecting in her driveway around 7:30 a.m. and by 1 p.m. she got her daughter out of school and went to Kimball's motel. At 2:30 p.m., water was more than three feet deep at the doors of her finished basement.

The backlog of water forced police to divert traffic around the stretch of North Main Street from Thursday afternoon until Friday. The Cohasset Department of Public works cut a trench across the rail bed that runs parallel to the street in an attempt to increase the flow of water into Sanctuary Pond.

"The water was as high as the wheels. It happened really quick. It can go really quick from one inch to three feet."
— Deborah Pitaro, North Main Street

An early morning high tide forced the flapper gates to shut at the harbor, which exacerbated the problem by preventing water from draining out of James Meadow. But by late afternoon, a torrent of water was gushing down the culvert under Elm Street, out the three out-fall pipes and into the harbor.

"The tide gates worked perfectly," said Haddad, referring to the ongoing debate between the town and Army Corps of Engineers which wants the town to install a self-regulating tide gate to allow a larger back flow of water from the harbor into the meadow, in an attempt to restore the salt marsh.

"The gates worked as they were supposed to work," Haddad said.

Haddad also received phone calls wondering why the post office parking lot was flooded after the town spent millions of dollars on the James Brook flood control project.

"Imagine what the flooding would have been like if we hadn't done that work," Haddad said. In October of 1996, a Nor-Easter flooded Ripley Road with more than four feet of water, after eight inches of rain fell in two days. Drainage pipes running through the area have been replaced, as well as an additional out-fall pipe added at the harbor. The remaining part of the project is to replace an undersized pipe underneath the town parking lot.

"We had a 25-year storm, but the run-off was a 100-year storm," Haddad explained.

"We've had 17, 100-year storms in the past three years," joked Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan.

Haddad said homes along Elm Street also experienced flooding from James Meadow.

He asked MBTA engineers Sverdrup to come down last Friday to see the flooding, and how a raised rail bed proposed for the Greenbush line would have affected the drainage process.

Back on North Main Street Pitaro's house was hit the worse. She left her home Thursday morning and didn't get electricity and heat back to her house until Monday. The five-year resident said it was the worst flooding on her property that she's seen.

Pitaro said she had just placed wall-to-wall carpeting in her basement but that was ruined by three-and-a half feet of water.

"It's like a bad dream," she said.

Powers said the power from her house was also cut, and the water ruined the furnace. She was able to return to her house on Saturday.

Noel Collins, who is in the process of purchasing the former Edison site, looked over his property as the water crested Thursday afternoon. "This is the worst I've seen it," he said. "It's almost breaching the railroad bed."

Mariner weather observer Bob Skilling said nearly 10 inches of rain has fallen this month — the third wettest March on record since 1953.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Planes, trains and automobiles

Regardless of what side of the transportation issues you fall on — we can all agree the South Shore is facing some major changes in the years ahead.

Massport is proposing a new Logan runway that would help ease congestion at the airport at the expense of towns like Hingham and Cohasset over which thousands of planes will approach.

Restoration of the Greenbush Line of the Old Colony Railroad seems to be inching closer to reality despite years of opposition. With the train project comes major infrastructure changes including grade crossings, stations and parking lots.

And now that the Mills Mall proposal for the former Weymouth Naval Air Station is no longer, we wait and wonder what the future holds for that sleeping giant.

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we do our best to keep you informed about all the multifaceted developments. But over the years, we continue to be impressed by local citizens who aren't afraid to get involved and delve into the complexities of the issues and try to make a difference.

Many of those have educated us at board meetings or shared their opinions and research with us through columns, letters and as sources for stories.

Still others are now lobbying for passage of the Community Preservation Act in an effort to protect open space and provide some money for historic preservation and affordable housing.

All the projects and issues comprise an amazing amount of information that is difficult to absorb because it's so vast and complicated.

We owe those citizens who help us sort through and make sense of hundreds of pages of environmental feasibility studies and the like, a debt of gratitude.

Warrant for your attention

If you haven't opened the Town Warrant that appeared in your mailbox last week, please do. It is chock full of information that is presented in an organized, informative way. There is a report from the Town Manager explaining the budget and some 34 articles — or items of business before Town Meeting that will have a direct effect on your pocket book and quality of life. The Annual Town Meeting gets underway at 10 a.m. Saturday in the high school gym. Make it a point to attend.

There will be lots of healthy debate on a range of issues. If you're not familiar with town meetings, they are not intimidating events. You can sit back and relax and take it all in, or stand up at a microphone and speak your mind. But whichever you chose to do — the important thing is that you're participating in the governing of a truly special place, your hometown.

Still time to comment on proposed water-rate hike

The Massachusetts Department of Telecommunications and Energy is still soliciting public comment on the proposed rate increase filed by the Massachusetts-American Water Co.

Massachusetts-American, which provides water service in Hull, Hingham and North Cohasset, is seeking to raise rates by 16 percent, or nearly $100 per year for the average residential customer.

State regulators have delayed the effective date of any increase until Aug. 1, and DTE officials have said that public comments can be submitted at any time during the hearing process.

Ratepayers, residents, and other interested parties are encouraged to register their opinions by e-mail at dte.efiling@state.ma.us or to send written comments to: Mary L. Cottrell, Secretary; DTE 00-105; Department of Telecommunications and Energy; One South Station; Boston, MA 02110.

Copies of the rate petition are available for inspection at Hingham Town Hall, the DTE's Boston office at One South Station, or the Massachusetts-American Norwell office, 200 Cordwainer Drive, Suite 200, (781) 982-7555.

Additional information on the water-rate filing can be obtained at the DTE's web site: http://www.state.ma.us/dpu/catalog/Water.htm

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Handgun violence

TO THE EDITOR:

Since the Million Mom March 2000, Stop Handgun Violence-South Shore has been working continuously toward helping create a comprehensive solution to the gun violence that has gripped our country for far too long. That is why we are asking for your support for three bills that will strengthen Massachusetts' sensible gun laws. Currently, our state leads the nation in gun control. But these bills will further insure the safety of our citizens.

Senate Bill #1193, An Act to Further Reduce Gun Violence will aid law enforcement through ballistic fingerprinting. Senate Bill #166, An Act to Prevent Illegal Trafficking limits gun purchases to one gun a month. This bill will cut into the illegal trafficking of firearms by straw purchasers and greatly reduce the ability of criminals and children to obtain guns on the street. The third bill, State Docket #1836 closes the assault weapons loophole. This bill can limit access to what is clearly a firearm suited for warfare, not home protection or hunting. On April 3, The Joint Public Safety committee is hosting a public hearing to review gun legislation. The hearing will be held in the Gardner Auditorium of the State House at 10 a.m.

Clearly, if we are going to succeed in our effort to end the school shootings and the gun violence that has begun to define our lives your commitment and help are crucial. We urge you to write letters to state Rep. Garrett Bradley and state Sen. Bob Hedlund, to attend the public hearing on April 3, and to join Stop Handgun Violence-South Shore.

For more information on the hearing or to arrange for transportation to State House, please contact Amyra O'Connell 383-1574, Connie Afshar 383-6006, Vickie Watkins 383-2652.

Lobster Lab

TO THE EDITOR:

In response to recent statements concerning the Lobster Lab, I would like to try to put some things into perspective.

The Selectmen's recent request that the Lab show funds of approximately $326,000 by the first of October is not an attempt to shut the lab down and demolish the house on the Hagerty property. When the property was leased to the lab, the proponents showed a fund raising schedule that anticipated raising $339,000 by August 2001. There have never been any hard figures provided by the lab to show how fund raising was proceeding. Vague statements of the amounts raised are all that have ever been offered. The Selectmen are merely trying to make sure there are sufficient funds available to make the improvements the lab claims will be started this fall. This is not unreasonable, if anything, this request is long overdue.

Claims that the work on the lab was held up by the plans for the Hagerty property are specious at best. When the lab made its proposal to lease the property some time ago, they claimed that by this date the renovations on the house would be about 50 percent completed. This was before the Towns plans for the property were even close to being finalized. To make the Hagerty Committee the scapegoat for the lab's inability to raise funds and keep to the schedule they offered is a laugh. If not for the support of the Hagerty committee before the Selectmen and at two Town Meetings, the lab would probably not have gotten the property to begin with, so in a twisted sense, I guess the committee is to blame for the property being in the state it is.

The claim that if the house were removed it would be replaced by parking is not necessarily true. While additional parking could be created, the committee has strongly supported creating green space where the house currently sits. The Hagerty committee has always tried to develop the site in a way that would hopefully benefit everyone in town, boaters and non-boaters alike. That is why the committee has requested the area be re-zoned from light industrial to open space. The motion is on the Town meeting agenda for this Saturday, and I hope is received favorably.

The Town tried hard to find a use for the building, and the lab was the only proposal that at the time seemed viable. The viability of the lab seems slight at this point in time. The work that was proposed by the lab should be able to me carried out in the labs that currently exist in the school system.

The lab was a good idea that unfortunately has proved difficult to achieve. This does not reflect poorly on anyone. To paraphrase Shakespeare: It is better to have tried and failed than not to have tried at all. But the time has come to face reality.

Accessory dwellings

TO THE EDITOR:

Last week's Mariner published a letter concerning Article 21 of the Town Warrant. I would like to address that letter but first I want to play a little background music. Tom Brokaw in his book "The Greatest Generation" states "This is a story of a generation, American citizens, heroes and heroines who came to age during the Great Depression and the Second World War and went on to build America." When the War was over they came home to finish their education, get jobs and married in record numbers. Salaries were not very high in those days but they put together a few bucks and bought homes in a town like Cohasset. Through the years they struggled with mortgage payments, taxes and their children's education. They build schools and churches, they worked hard to make their town grow.

Now, the mortgages were nearly paid of children's education was almost complete when some of them started to die off. They left their widows with nice homes and not much income. Remember during this period income was a lot lower than now and there were no IRA's of 401ks. Widows did find themselves house rich and cash poor.

Several years ago the Cohasset Elder Affairs became aware of this. They formed a committee to study what could be done. As a result of this committee, the town authorized a Senior Housing Committee and approved funds to have University of Massachusetts to do a survey of elders in Cohasset. One of the striking answers to the survey was that many seniors thought their houses were too big and too expansive to maintain. They wanted to stay in Cohasset with their friends, churches etc. However, if they sold their house where could they find living quarters in town?

I strongly agree that being able to differ real estate taxes is a great help to some seniors but it does not work for everybody and does not address the expense and difficulty of maintaining the home. The first point of last week's letter states that the Article does nothing to help the seniors. The letter does not address the fact that the senior selling his or her home will have cash to pay rent and help maintain the home with the accessory apartment. Another problem is that seniors like their independence, but they are also lonely. Two seniors living in the same house, with separate living space could be company for each other.

The second of the three points of the article states the problems of the article far outweighs any potential benefit to the handful of seniors who might take advantage of the article. Well, if there is only going to be a few taking advantage of the article I do not feel it could cause that much harm. Besides there are restrictions built into the article.

The third point is really bothersome to me. The letter implies that the proponents are doing an end-around zoning laws to allow multi-unit housing. My father and family came to Cohasset in the late 40's and developed a large section of town. I believe most people would say that their development was a model for the town and it was done before there were any zoning as there is today. The only building codes were electrical inspection. The Senior Housing Committee for the most part is made up of citizens who have been interested in elder affairs for years. They are not interested in end around anything except helping those who, if not for their whole life, at least for 40 to 50 years helped in the growth of Cohasset. This committee has been meeting twice a month for over a year now. They are still exploring other alternatives. The problem is there is no land available. The article talks about being creative. Remember the old Osgood School was supposed to be for housing. Now accessory dwellings "have serious detrimental affect on our quality of life and property. " What about the quality of life of the people that helped raise your property values to what they are today?

MORE LETTERS, SEE PAGE 8

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectman: What can selectmen do to improve relations between police and some members of the community who think the police are too tough on teens?

SELECTMAN/Tom Callahan

Improve communication. I've been told both that the police have spoken at the schools on some occasions, but that they have been turned away or not invited on others. There are too many second-hand anecdotes and accusations going around, with apparently little or no actual direct communication.

From "the opposing camps", I sense that on the one hand some police are considered to be overzealous, and on the other hand parents and teens are considered both to lack of an appreciation of the police's legal obligations and perhaps an appreciation of the role of personal and parental responsibility. It has become evident that in both perception and reality there is a wide gulf between the parties. This gulf should not continue.

I would therefore propose that the Selectmen, with the School Committee, Drug & Alcohol Committee, PSO and/or High School Council, set up some forums where the police, the teens, their parents and other interested citizens get together and (hopefully) honestly and openly express their points of view. The goal of these forums should be to bury the hatchets, real and imagined, and as an entire community reach consensus as to what our intervention and arrest policies regarding teens are and should be. Whether those policies are now or should be "zero tolerance," I believe the resulting policies need to be fully understood and accepted by the community as a whole.

SELECTMAN/Merle Brown

The chief of police, who in turn works for the town manager, runs the police department. As it should be. We the selectmen are limited to what we can and should do. The men and women who are police officers are trained professionals we are not. However, that being said, we have asked the town manager and police chief to put on educational seminars to try and have the public understand what the police department's job is and how it has changed over the years. We also asked if there could be a policy put in place as a standard that all the police officers could follow in dealing with the teens. With all that is going on these days it is not an easy job. Over all I think our department does a great job.

Planning board: Given your druthers, what would you envision for the former Webb-Norfolk site on Rte. 3A?

PLANNING BOARD/ Richard Brown

Regarding the question of what to do with the old Norfolk Conveyer site, I believe that whatever development occurs should come from the private sector and not be a town or government project.

It is important for Cohasset to have some land that can be commercially developed, and not all built out with expensive new homes.

Personally, I would love to see a sports complex built there with all types of facilities such as one that has recently been developed in Bridgewater.

In any event, there should be no rush to judgment. The land involved will be here long after we are all gone.

PLANNING BOARD/ Peter Pratt

I support maintaining the 62-acre Webb-Norfolk site on Route 3A as one of the few parcels in Cohasset designated within our single 'Technology Business' district. Ideally, this site could host a clean and well-planned corporate office campus to generate commercial tax revenues for the town without negative impacts on the community.

I was one of the citizen sponsors of last year's successful town meeting action that created the new Technology Business designation for this site and for several adjacent parcels along the west side of Route 3A. Formerly these parcels comprised the majority of the Light Industry district on Route 3A, a designation that could have allowed for permitted expansion of the adjacent Cohasset Heights Ltd. commercial landfill, or for significant residential construction under a special permit. Either landfill expansion or residential subdivision development on this large parcel would not be in the best interests of Cohasset. Our amendment to the zoning bylaws of last year should continue to prohibit such uses.

The fact that creation of the Technology Business district last year was accomplished by citizen petition rather than by initiative of the Planning Board is proof positive that the Board needs to be more proactive in updating our zoning bylaws to protect the character, natural resources, and revenue base of the Town. If elected to the Planning Board, I intend to move the Board forward with this type of proactive agenda within the context of a critically needed new master plan for Cohasset.

School committee: Although only the bottom line of the school budget is approved at Town Meeting, does the school department have a moral obligation to spend the budgeted line items as presented to voters and not move money around?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Mark DeGiacomo

There is nothing moral or immoral about the school department's ability to pay unanticipated expenses with funds the School Committee had originally designated to be spent in other ways.

The school department budget contains in over 1000 line items and is approved by the School Committee several months before it takes effect. In recognition of the fact that unanticipated expenses such as special education costs or spikes in utility bills can and do arise under a budget which is established months before it goes into effect, state law permits all school districts in the Commonwealth to shift money from one line item to another on an as needed basis. Although some see this power as inherently evil, it actually is a tool that saves the town money. Without the ability to make these transfers, the school department would be forced to go back to the town to obtain additional money in order to pay any unexpected bills. In fact, when the school department has requested additional funds from the town in the middle of a fiscal year, the first question always asked is whether the school department has done everything it can to cover the unexpected expenses by underspending some of the line items in its budget.

I believe that the school department should do everything it can to pay all of its expenses with the funds included in the annual budget that is approved by Town Meeting.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Adrienne MacCarthy

The school budget that is presented at Town Meeting, is the bottom line figure. It is the result of numerous meetings, forums and negotiations involving the school, town officials and the general public. During the budget process, all involved attempt to anticipate changes in enrollment, staffing levels, supplies and other related expenses. The resulting budget is then approved six to nine months prior to the time the actual expenses are realized. With this in mind, I do not see how it would be feasible to restrict the movement of funds from one line item to another in order to cover unforeseeable events. For example, the dramatic increase in fuel prices this year caught all of us off guard to some degree. This caused many organizations, businesses and households to revisit their budgets and make the necessary changes in order to pay their heating bills. The school budget is no different.

To place any restrictions on moving monies from one line item to another would be fiscally irresponsible; because such a restriction would then require a special town meeting, at a cost of approximately $7,000, to approve any such transfers.

The school department has a fiscal, not a moral obligation to the town for the budget it presents and how it manages that budget throughout the year. And while most of the discussion focuses on unforeseen expenses, the same level of fiscal responsibility should apply to how they handle unforeseen revenues.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Pat Martin

When the school budget for the new fiscal year is crafted and then finalized at the public hearing in late winter, (this year's date was Feb. 12), it is the intention of the school committee, superintendent and building principals to follow all line items as proposed and approved. Much, however, can happen over the next 18 months before that budget year comes to a close. New children can move into the district, utility and supply prices can rise, boilers can blow and teachers can get sick. It is for reasons such as these that the law provides for movement between school budget line items. Morally and legally, the law states that the obligation for the School Committee lies with providing the best educational experience we can to the people within our charge; students.

Each year, when the budget process begins, residents are invited and encouraged to attend our meetings to express their feelings regarding the budget, a particular line item or an entire program. It is at that time when we are obligated to listen to our public concerns and develop the budget which may include moving money around for the following year.

Trials of taking 2000 census

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Well, the census people have finished counting us now and they found 281,421,906 of us — give or take a few million here or there.

I say "give or take" because there appears to be a large portion of the public who didn't want to be counted in the first place.

Did anyone think to count Whitey Bulger or anyone else on the FBI's 10 most wanted list? Or the undocumented immigrants (a euphemism for illegal aliens) who inhabit the sculleries of our best restaurants.

This is called the undercount and some folks want to tack it onto the total count so that federal largesse (or "pork," as Howie Carr would say) can be more fairly distributed among those who need it the most.

My question is this: If the undercounted weren't counted, then how do they know how many there are?

The U. S. Census Bureau says the 2000 census may have missed between 2.7 million and 3.9 million people but Northeastern University's Center for Labor Market Studies places the figure at nearly twice that.

Jeffrey Passel, a consultant for the Census Bureau, says the figure could be at least 9 million in illegal immigrants alone.

My question is this: Why should illegal aliens, most of them subject to deportation, be counted as residents at all when important things are decided like the number of congressmen allotted to a state and how much federal aid is doled out to them?

Things were much simpler during the first census in 1790 when 650 enumerators got paid $1 for every 300 people they counted in 13 states and four districts (Maine, Vermont, Kentucky and Tennessee). They found 3,929,214.

Those first census takers asked six questions:

The name of the head of the household and the number of persons in the household (1) who were free white males over 16, (2) free white males under 16, (3) white females, (4) all other free persons and (5) slaves.

Slaves, incidentally, were counted as only three-fifths of a person.

Even at that, resistance to the census as an intrusion on privacy was such that Secretary of State Tom Jefferson reported to President Washington that some hill folk from Kentucky were running the counters off at gunpoint like they was revenoors.

They hadn't seen nothing yet.

By 2000, the census enumerators had topped a half million, there were 53 questions on the long form and folks could choose from 63 racial categories, everything from "Black, African-American, or Negro" to "Guamanian or Chamorro."

"Let's all check Eskimo and see what happens," urged comedian Craig Kilborn.

And then, for the first time ever, there was the biracial category, or the Tiger Woods classification, so named for the golfer who is part black, part white, part Thai, part Chinese and part Native American.

He calls himself "Cablinasian," (Caucasian-Black-Indian-Asian) a category that undoubtedly appear on the 2010 long form.

And maybe by then they will have caught up with and counted Whitey Bulger, too.

Sprawl growth or smart growth?

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

The Cohasset Selectmen signed a document last fall titled "The New Mayflower Compact." This should be very good news for us and Earth. (I avoid using the term "the environment" because it reinforces the belief in humans being separate from Earth, a belief which is the root cause of the damage to Earth which threatens us all.)

The New Mayflower Compact recognizes we are unprepared for the sprawl growth Southeastern Massachusetts, including Cohasset, will experience in the next 20 years: 200,000 new residents. What is sprawl growth?

1. Growth outside existing centers which already have infrastructure (businesses, public buildings, homes, streets, sidewalks, parks, water, sewers, power, phone, public transit).
2. Low density, homogenous buildings, isolated from neighbors.
3. Built on farm or forest land, far from existing centers, requiring daily driving.
4. Growth that degrades, fragments and encroaches on natural resources.
5. Higher property taxes to pay for infrastructure and maintenance.

The Federal Environmental Protection Agency and the Massachusetts Executive Office of Environmental Affairs have both recognized the harmfulness of sprawl growth, and are working to discourage it. It's bad for the land, wildlife, the air we breathe, the economy, and for human community.

Sprawl growth is the greatest contributor to global warming. Because every daily trip requires driving, a typical Cohasset vehicle generates 13 tons of carbon dioxide (CO_2) per year. Two tons per vehicle can be sequestered by trees and other plants, leaving 11 tons added to global warming. Toyota and Honda now sell cars which produce 2 tons per year, under the same conditions. CO_2 from vehicles comprises about half the total produced in Cohasset. If you drive a vehicle, you can reduce this.

Heating sprawl homes produces the other half. A typical Cohasset house built to meet today's energy code produces 16 tons of CO_2 per year. One ton per home is sustainable, leaving 15 tons added to global warming.

We have inherited zoning and subdivision regulations from the years before we understood how harmful sprawl growth is to Earth and ourselves.

Upgrading the air tightness and insulation of a typical Cohasset house can reduce the CO_2 output to one ton, and reduce heating costs by 94percent. If you own your home, you can do this.

Admittedly it is more difficult to achieve these reductions with an existing house than when building new houses. All the more reason to stop building sprawl houses now. This is why The New Mayflower Compact should be such good news. Unfortunately it has no teeth yet. Not only is it unenforceable at present, but Cohasset's existing policies and regulations actually promote sprawl growth. We have inherited zoning and subdivision regulations from the years before we understood how harmful sprawl growth is to Earth and ourselves.

Is anything good about sprawl growth? It provides maximum privacy. In the Residential "C" zoning district of Cohasset, the minimum lot size is 60,000 sq. ft. or 1.4 acres. The average Cohasset household size is 2.78 persons, which works out to about half an acre per person. Pretty private. This also reduces the stress that can arise between neighbors, such as noise and other irritations. The flip side of maximum privacy is maximum isolation. Neighbors can live like this for many years and never meet.

It's a question of priorities. We can keep our sprawl houses unchanged and continue building more of them, maximizing privacy and the status quo, and face catastrophic climatic change and other degradations in the near future. Coming generations will face worse. Or we can begin finding ways to live sustainably and with more community. The Growth and Development Committee is now working to produce a master plan for Cohasset's future. It will either be sprawl or sustainability. You might wish to contact the Growth and Development Committee, the Town Planner, or the Selectmen and let them know your priorities.

At Town Meeting, Saturday, March 31, one or more articles will deal with a sprawl growth project currently proposed for the Wolf Pits property adjacent to the Town Reservoir. The Wolf Pits property is an ultimate sprawl for Cohasset, in that no point in town is more remote from Cohasset center, except parts of Wompatuck State Park and Trustees of Reservation lands. This project would maximize everything that is wrong with sprawl growth, including a threat to the Aaron River.

In the interest of Earth, wildlife, the air you breathe, the water you drink, and the character of Cohasset, please support articles at Town Meeting which would prevent growth in the Wolf Pits.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Richard Brown runs for Planning Board

Richard Brown, a lifelong resident and local business owner, has announced his candidacy for the open seat on the Planning Board. Raised by a single parent, he graduated from Cohasset High School in 1978 and opened his business on Route 3A immediately after graduation. From an initial investment of less that $1,000, he was able to operate a foreign auto repair business from what is now the Sunoco Station site. Later Brown purchased Bill Poland's Jenny station in central Cohasset. About 10 years ago, he moved his foreign auto operation back to Route 3A, where he operates Brown's Imports.

Richard Brown

Brown lives in Beechwood in a home he built on property he bought while still in high school. He is married and has two children ages 16 and 18. Brown has always been active in the community. Currently, he is president of the Cohasset Gridiron Club and a member of the Board of Directors of the Clark Chatterton Fund. His goal is simply to raise his family and for he and his wife to spend the rest of their lives in Cohasset.

According to Brown, or as his friends call him, Brownie, he has a strong interest in giving back to the community and making sure that the Planning Board keeps a "common sense" approach to their work, he believes that his business sense, and knowledge of building and construction and "hands on" skills will be an asset to the Planning Board.

"I'm a plain speaking person, easy to get along with, and would like to have your vote," said Brown in a recent interview.

Support for budget, override urged

EDUCATION MATTERS

SCHOOL COMMITTEE

On Saturday, March 31 at Cohasset's Annual Town Meeting, residents will be asked by the Cohasset School Committee, Board of Selectmen and Advisory Committee to support the FY2002 operating budget in article three of the warrant. Within this overall town budget, the Cohasset School Committee will ask for the support of the school department's FY2002 budget.

This year's budget illustrates several things. First, what Mark Haddad, our Town Manager describes in his annual report as the "outstanding cooperation" between the School Committee, Board of Selectmen and Town Manager. Before our budget process began, Dr. Malvey and our chairman sat down with Mark Haddad and Mike Buckley to discuss the needs of the schools and its budget impact on the entire town budget.

They presented the following scenario. If we could address our needs within an increase of $600,000 for FY 2002, it would allow the town to address its demands and relieve the need for a Proposition 2 1/2 override. We have. Voters will be presented with the request to support an town wide override, however, in the amount of $300,000. Health insurance rates for all employees have unexpectedly increased by 18 percent and money is needed to cover unanticipated budget 2001 shortfalls in such areas as police over time as well as legal expenses to contest the proposed rate increase by Mass American Water. We ask you to support this override at Town Meeting on March 31 and in the April 7 election.

Although the override is not related to the school budget, its passing is the only way to ensure no cuts would need to be made if the town were to suffer this shortfall in funding. Second, the Fy2002 budget supports the priority needs of our schools as presented by our principals, administrators and superintendent. This budget support reflects areas where we have been challenged with issues impacting our district. Most severely, the continuing increase of student enrollment.

Since 1996, we have had a total of 101 new students enter our schools and anticipate another 54 next year. Although in the past, this increase had mostly affected our populations in K-6, we saw a larger than expected seventh grade the middle school this year. We therefore needed to add 5 new teachers for next year; four at the middle school and one for the third grade. Within this budget, we have also been able to relieve the stresses increased enrollment has had on our specialists who offered art, music, and technology. We were able to devote more staff time and resources to these areas. Demand for greater participation in sports was also addressed by adding girls softball and reinstating our no-cut policy to the middle school sports program.

To relieve the current and further anticipated crunch on our administrators' time with the coming of several state mandates, such as the SPED audit, high school accreditation, new teacher recertification process, upcoming grade reconfiguration and the 3 year building renovation project, we added time to an existing part time administrative aide position thus making it a full time business manager. For the first time in three years, we were also able to commit new dollars to the much needed custodial and cleaning support in our buildings. Coupled with new management techniques, we are already seeing an improvement in this area.

Adopting land act will save money in long run

MY VIEW

ALIX WHITE

I am writing to urge you to vote yes on Question 2 on April 7.This question asks you whether you would like to keep land open, provide grants to the elderly and disabled for adapting their homes to overcome physical challenges, and help income-eligible, first-time home buyers with their down payment. This ballot question is called the Community Preservation Act and I think it's worth supporting. Why? Because I'm cheap. I'd rather pay a little bit now as an investment, than a lot later. I'd rather pay the 1.5 percetn surcharge on my property tax (this excludes the first $100,000 of my valuation and will cost me $66 per year) than lose the option to buy open land as it becomes available. The state will match my $66 and all this will be spent on the common good.

I'd like to speak to you about the value of open space in our town. In 1974 we had the opportunity to buy the American Legion land on Forest Ave for $64,000 . We decided not to buy it then. People said at Town Meeting that no one would want to buy it because it wouldn't perk. There are many large houses on that land now. We have 1,551 open acres that are privately held here in Cohasset. Any serious developer knows where they are. Much of that land might seem too rocky or too wet to you or me, but a developer can work miracles on marginal sites. What I learned as your board of health member for the past six years and as your organic grower for the last 15 years is that if the land isn't protected by conservation restriction, it will be developed. We need to be as serious as the developers about land use. The Community Preservation Act will do that.

We also need to be serious about housing needs. This act dedicates 10 percent every year to elderly/disabled and low income housing, 10 percent to historic housing and 10 percent to land acquisition. We decide at Town Meeting how the remaining 70 percent will be spent: housing needs, open space, or historic housing.

Won't you join me in being cheap? Vote yes on Question 2 on Apr 7 for the ultimate savings plan: the Community Preservation Act.

CPA, an investment

TO THE EDITOR:

It was fascinating to hear the specifics on television last week about the valuable opportunity the town of Cohasset has to participate in the Preservation Act Program. Debbie Cook, who obviously has done her homework, clearly outlined for our edification, the benefits to be derived from participation in the Program. However, Elsa Miller, who apparently agreed that the Preservation Act was a "great" opportunity, surprisingly advised that it may be more prudent for Cohasset to "wait and see" how the other towns fare before entering into the program. As the old adage goes, "he who hesitates is lost". I believe the same holds true in this situation. It is clear that the financial resources of the State are finite, especially in light of the tax cuts voted in last November. As time marches on, there will be fewer and fewer public dollars available to the various communities. As Debbie pointed out, the per household cost would be approximately $66 per year! (based upon the he median home price of approximately $400,000).

If you worked for a company that offered a benefit whereby for every dollar you invested in a retirement fund, they would match it 30-100 percent, would it be more prudent for you to wait and see how your co-workers fared under the program or would you sign on without delay? What benefit would you derive, in either scenario by waiting? I remember when I was single and just starting out, every cent of my paycheck was eagerly anticipated and often times, already spoken for before payday even arrived. But even then, I knew I would be a fool if I didn't take advantage of my employer's "Thrift Plan" of matching funds. The same holds true in this situation. Although I recognize that everything is relative so that to some the cost of $66 per year may seem like a great deal of money, the fact is that investing that money in this way would be a win-win situation for all. This is true in light of the fact that this money would be utilized not only for the preservation of land, but also for senior and low income housing. In addition, in certain circumstances, you may be exempt from any cost.

Some important points to remember are that (1) it has been projected that Cohasset has the potential to grow by as much as 50 percent. (2) the cost of providing ongoing services to residential development outpaces the revenue derived from tax assessment of those properties, (3) it could be your own backyard that some developer wants to develop. Some of you may mistakenly believe that the Conservation Commission can protect all the land in Cohasset from being developed, this is not the case, the Commission's jurisdiction is limited. By voting for participation in the Preservation Act you can ensure that the Cohasset that we are lucky enough to live in and enjoy will remain a unique and beautiful place. Please, make the investment, today!

We truly appreciate their tremendous effort!

CPA supported

TO THE EDITOR:

It is called the Community Preservation Act. Why is it called the Community Preservation Act?

This Act has three categories, preservation, creation and support of community housing. Preservation and acquisition of Historic structures and landscapes. Preservation, acquisition and creation of open space.

To help preserve the character of this town, which seems to be very important to many, we must consider voting yes on Question 2 on the Ballot on April 7th. It creates the opportunity to help "Preserve" our Town.

The State has created a 25 million Trust Fund to be shared by towns all across the state. It seems to make sense for us to get in as early in the game as possible.

If we vote for this Preservation Act, our Town must set up a Preservation Committee of at least five but no more than nine members to study and make recommendations to subsequent Town Meetings to acquire or rehabilitate in any of the categories designated by the Act. Each year the Town must designate at least 10 percent of the total fund for each of these three categories but not necessarily spent at one time in one year.

Funds can also be used as leverage to assist the town in borrowing to accomplish any one of the three defined goals of the Act. When these funds are available, we will not have to start at ground zero in raising money for any of the above, if and when we would like to accomplish them.

We have the choice of our surcharge being 1 1/2 percent, not as high as 3 percent which is the maximum.

Exemptions allowed are:

1. Property owned and occupied by a resident who qualifies for low income housing, or low or moderate income senior housing.

2. The first $100,000 of value on any residential real estate property.

3. Class 3 commercial or class 4 industrial property.

Can you see how rapidly our town is changing? Most of us can look back only last year and see how quickly change is happening.

Perhaps this will help us strike a balance between private development and the preservation of the character of our town that many seem to think is so important.

Open space and community housing will be at a premium in the future, if development continues. As an old timer has said "They don't make land any more!"

So let us try to preserve and restore as much as possible.

Look for this on the Ballot on April 7, and in the meantime look around, read all you can, ask questions and even visit www.tpl.org/CPA

100 signatures

TO THE EDITOR:

The proponents of Article 7 at the up-coming Town Meeting would like the Citizens of Cohasset to understand the reasoning behind the Article.

At present, only 10 signatures are required to insert a Citizen's Petition in the Warrant for the Annual Town Meeting. Ten friends or five couples two-tenths or 1 percent of the voter's. To insert a Citizen's Petition in the Warrant for a Special Town Meeting takes 100 signatures, or 2 percent of the Town's approximately 5,000 voters.

There may once have been a reason for the requirements to be different, but that no longer appears to be so. Special Town Meetings were for special things and came up rarely. Now, however, we have a Special Town Meeting every year and it is, in effect, the Semi-Annual Meeting with a fairly long warrant.

With 100 citizens supporting an Article, there will be much broader based community support for it, which should help its passage. The opponents call this un-democratic .

We feel that it is a very much more democratic way of governing.

The opponents also contend that we are depriving citizens of their rights in that it will be much harder to get the required number of signatures. Hogwash!

It is neither onerous nor difficult to collect 100 signatures. It only requires one to be a little more organized. If those 10 people willing to sign a petition currently can not each find 10 like-minded citizens to join them, then there is no broad-based support for the petition.

Malvey responds

TO THE EDITOR:

In last week's edition of another local newspaper it was alleged that I only work 2 days a week in my capacity as Superintendent of Schools.

To say the least, this is a very disturbing rumor that the author has spread before consulting with me or the School Committee. I would expect that any responsible journalist would first check with the target of such outlandish statements.

In point of fact, your Superintendent does work 5 days per week along with a multitude of evenings to fulfill the many responsibilities of a CEO for an excellent school district. I should add, that I am pleased to serve our educational community.

In the future, I would suggest that allegations should be explored with me for the truth rather than outlandish stories which may be mere schoolyard talk.

Are we not better than this in Cohasset?

Rumors disputed

TO THE EDITOR:

Recently, the Cohasset School Committee was publicly challenged in (another) local publication to speak up and show some leadership regarding "rumors" that Dr. Edward Malvey only works two days a week in his current position as superintendent of schools. Our response; these rumors are blatant and outright falsehoods. It troubles us as to the motivations of a very small minority who wish to impune the reputation of a fine and hard-working professional who has served this town well in his capacity. We are extremely proud of the accomplishments Dr. Malvey has achieved in his short time with us and look forward to his serving our district for a very long time to come. We are confident that with his abilities, we will continue to move the Cohasset School District ahead on its path of statewide excellence.

Support Article 21

TO THE EDITOR:

Let's get one thing straight ...the accessory dwelling zoning article has been developed over a period of nearly two years. Some think it is going to change the character of the town. On the contrary, it may be a vehicle to retain residents who have contributed to this town over a lifetime.

How so you may ask ? A survey completed in 2000 by U. Mass Boston regarding Cohasset Senior Housing issues noted that 75 percent of respondents indicated their residences were either too large or too expensive to maintain, for people on fixed incomes.

Accessory dwelling would allow a large home to be fitted with an independent unit perhaps for two seniors or perhaps for a family to have a grandparent close by but allowing him, or her, their own space. This zoning amendment has safeguards within the application process. I would be most disappointed if "scare" tactics are used to defeat this article

It really is painful to have some residents proclaim their wish to protect the town ...close the gate ...we have arrived! The Senior Housing Committee is examining many possibilities. This is not short-sighted and it is not simply about affordability.

I urge the voters to acknowledge the need of some citizens but most especially seniors for just one of many possible, sensible, housing alternatives.

Please vote for Article 21.

New group rails against Greenbush weeks ago with what will be the first of a series of eight-page inserts — included in local papers in Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate and Weymouth. The insert warned of the harmful health effects of the train's diesel particulates and nitrous oxide emissions and even depicted a photograph of young girl in the arms of a nurse holding an inhaler over her nose and mouth. Subsequent inserts will tackle different quality-of-life and transportation issues.

The insert with its graphic photographs and dire warnings of increased respiratory diseases proved too much for Boston Globe columnist Brian McGrory of Weymouth. McGrory used it to launch another in his series of attacks against parochial Hingham, in an attempt to make the town the laughingstock of the South Shore.

"I urgently called friends in Wellesley, in Manchester-by-the-Sea, in Needham, because like virtually every other town around Boston, they have the train," McGrory wrote. "Are hospitals filled with children gasping for their last breath?"

But Bewick thinks Greenbush opponents will have the last laugh.

"My general principle as secretary was when a town was strongly opposed to a project — it didn't happen," he said.

Bewick moved to Hingham from the west Boston suburbs 18 months ago after marrying Hingham native and water transportation advocate Martha Reardon. Mrs. Bewick, also a member of AfTA, is principal of The Harbor Consultancy International that specializes in policy and systems planning for ferry studies.

"I've been amazed since I've been here how intensely people feel about the train," said Bewick, a former physics professor, who runs a software-consulting firm on Station Street in Hingham Square, just a stone's throw away from the long-abandoned rail bed. "The only comparable example I can think of is when I was secretary, Westford was proposed as a potential hazardous waste site.

"Within a week, 1,200 people met to oppose it and it was quickly killed."

But despite intense opposition over the past decade, Greenbush appears to be alive and well. Yet Bewick thinks the project is still vulnerable to grassroots opposition and legal challenges even as the five towns along the line hammer out multi-million dollar mitigation agreements with the MBTA. Hingham, which is the only town so far to have a finalized agreement, inked a $40 million contract including a tunnel under Hingham Square last spring.

Bewick says the MBTA grossly distorted the benefits of alternatives to the train, a violation of the MEPA (Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act) process. MEPA is the state equivalent of the federal Environmental Protection Agency and requires major projects to meet certain environmental standards including a balanced look at alternatives.

"The whole point of MEPA is to get to a better project with less impact," he said. "Everyone realizes the train has the most impact.

"I feel the MEPA process has been violated and that deeply offends me as a former secretary." Impacts include pollution, noise, vibration and disruption during construction.

He charges that the MBTA studies on Greenbush were designed to confirm a predetermined outcome with the benefits and costs of train alternatives deeply distorted. For example, he says the MBTA claims a Scituate commuter boat would cost $80 million to implement when other studies say it would cost as little as $6 million.

But Martha Gjesteby of Cohasset, a regional representative on the Citizens Advisory Committee — appointed by the state Secretary of Environmental Affairs — studying the Greenbush EIR, says the train environmental studies are fine.

"We have spent years on this," said Gjesteby, who has sat on the advisory committee for about 17 years. "I feel the MBTA's response to our questions has been more than adequate. The T has been extraordinarily open to discussion.

"I've been involved in other EIRs, the Central Artery for example, and Greenbush is one of the most detailed."

Gjesteby, who supports the train, admits the issue is a divisive one. "It's unfortunate that people who either really want it or don't want it, have blinders on."

She says from a regional perspective, after looking at all the different alternatives, the train makes sense.

"Hingham has the commuter boat, MBTA bus and closer access to the Red Line," Gjesteby pointed out. "But from a regional point of view the Plymouth & Brockton bus service is not adequate, and boats have not been proven on the open ocean. The only way to move mass numbers of people effectively and improve air quality by taking cars off the road is the train."

Although AfTA — which is funded through private donations — is in the "embryonic stage," Bewick says a core group of about 20 with representatives from every affected Greenbush community meet at his office every other week to plan strategy. The first round of newspaper inserts, including extra copies, cost $2,600, according to Community Newspaper Company.

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, a Greenbush opponent, praised AfTA for educating the public about effects of the train.

"I think they are doing a service by bringing some of these issues to light," he said.

Bewick says local opposition to the train that subsided somewhat after Hingham withdrew its lawsuit last spring and signed an agreement with the MBTA is being regenerated. Bewick also thinks other towns are rising up against the train and points to the North Scituate rally last year that drew upwards of 1,000 people.

"All the other towns went to sleep while Hingham was leading the parade," he said. "Once Hingham signed the MBTA agreement, the other towns woke up."

Uncertainty worries businesses along right of way deal includes a $40 million tunnel under Hingham Square to eliminate grade crossings and the traffic nightmare they would cause in the quaint, but congested town center.

ABB Optical in Cohasset Village is one of the private properties with specific mitigation measures outlined in that town's proposed mitigation agreement with the MBTA.

The contact-lens maker has been located on Pleasant Street near the South Shore Art Center for nearly 25 years. The narrow, one-story structure is so close to the tracks that employees could easily reach out the building's window and touch a train going by.

"Our question is, how would the vibrations affect our contact lens manufacturing process," said ABB Optical co-owner Paul Lemieux. Part of the manufacturing process, he explained, is cutting the lens with a lathe to the exact dimensions of a customer's eye.

ABB Optical, which employs 64 people, is slated to receive anti-vibration padding under its lathes and under the tracks outside. But Lemieux said while the vibration mitigation is welcome, he worries whether it will enough once the train starts to roll. Noise is another concern.

"We take 1,500 calls a day from doctors calling in orders for contact lenses," Lemieux said. "Even though they've done sound-testing here, we still have the problem of when a train passes by, being able to hear the doctor on the phone.

— Paul Lemieux, ABB Optical in Cohasset Village

"The MBTA has done nothing to alleviate that concern."

Weymouth Landing is the latest hotspot of Greenbush controversy, in particular the Quincy Avenue grade crossing. At its busiest, the landing is a snarl of traffic as motorists look to go to Quincy, Rte. 3, Rte. 53 or Rte.18. Stopping traffic on Quincy Avenue for two minutes during rush hour while a train passes through is not a pretty picture. Current debate centers on whether to dig another tunnel or to build a viaduct over the grade crossing. It's one answer Dan Quirk would like to have.

Quirk, who owns Quick Chevrolet and Kia in Weymouth Landing, stands to lose not only parking spaces along the abandoned Greenbush right-of-way, but potentially a sizeable chunk of his lot.

"It all depends on the construction, and however they configure the tunnel or viaduct, and a lot of other different things," Quirk said. With plans not finalized, Quirk has no idea how much of his land will be taken, if any.

His dealership, which has been on the two-acre site since 1977, has four buildings including a 24,000 square foot main showroom, and the 9,000 square foot Kia showroom in the back corner, as well as 450 cars stored on the property. He leases the right-of-way from the state and stores cars on it.

Though he doesn't think his business will be drastically impacted, Quirk doesn't like being in limbo.

"I would rather know sooner than later," Quirk says. "As soon as they finalize their plans, I can decide on how it will impact my business."

When commuter rail service stopped, the old depot in Hingham Square was torn now and replaced by a building that includes The British Relief restaurant and Bowl & Board, a staple there since 1972. The store sells a variety of house wares, utensils, furniture and giftware. Though trains occasionally ran down the right-of-way behind the store until 1983, store manager Carl Achille said there is no comparison to what the Greenbush Line will do.

"The last few trains that went down that track, which is nine feet from the back of my building, would go two to four miles per hour, because none of the gates worked at that time," he recalls. "And even then the entire building vibrated," he said. "People could just use their imagination what a high-speed train would do whether it sat at-grade or below-grade."

The prospect of the tunnel provides little solace.

"With the construction of the tunnel, I've heard it will take everything from a year to two years of disruption to the downtown.," Achille said. " I don't know how some businesses will be able to ever continue during the construction period."

MBTA plans to use 'creative' financing forward-funding operating plan would have on the MBTA. The forward-funding plan requires the MBTA to set an operating budget, and live by it, instead of sending a bill to the Legislature at the end of the year. As of this year, when forward-funding went into effect, the MBTA's budget is created mainly through rider fares, assessments on user-towns, and 20 percent of the revenues collected from the state sales tax.

The study, chaired by former Senate Ways and Means Committee Chairman Patricia McGovern, concluded that under forward-funding, the MBTA would not be able to pay for Red Line station improvements, and construct Greenbush, as well as the proposed Fall River/ New Bedford expansion.

But, says Hedlund, the state has ignored the findings since it was released last April. "They've commissioned the report and now they've ignored it," he said. Bradley said the MBTA is using the contractor as the bank, because, Greenbush construction "can't be addressed in it's normal capital outline."

Sullivan spokesman John Carlisle said that's not the case at all. "The primary reason we chose the design/build method was to speed it up. We can break ground prior to the date we had though. It's a timing thing. But it doesn't hurt that once you negotiate the price it's locked in," he said. "You know what happens when transportation projects go up in costs, and what people think about that."

Hedlund said the creative financing plan is also an example of how determined the state is to see restoration become a reality. "They've demonstrated they're hell-bent on getting it done. Some people have staked their reputations on getting it done," Hedlund said, refusing to name names. "They've positioned themselves as champions of the project and consider it a test of their political and professional skills and future. And they want to see it done at all costs.

"This is why you're seeing the potential use of the design/build strategy," Hedlund continued. "This is a creative way — if you want to call it creative — an underhanded way to come up with money for it outside of forward funding."

Hedlund said already MBTA budget stuffing has begun to make sure the McGovern report's predictions don't come true. Last summer, on the last day of formal sessions, Hedlund said House Speaker Thomas Finneran submitted a $60 million supplemental budget for Red Line station improvements. Hedlund blasted the last-minute move, both on the floor that day, and again last week, as "a raid on the general fund" and said Finneran "trampled on the spirit of forward-funding." Despite Hedlund's objections, the bill passed.

"Supplemental budgets are supposed to be for salaries, not capital projects," Hedlund railed. "The irony is, Finneran had held up the state budget the year before for four months because he insisted that forward funding be part of the final budget that year.

"Not even one year into forward-funding, and the Legislature did a complete end around," he continued. "It led credence to what McGovern said...It shows the MBTA is having trouble staying within its budget."

A recent transportation bond bill gave the MBTA permission to construct one project through the design/build method, and Greenbush will be that project.

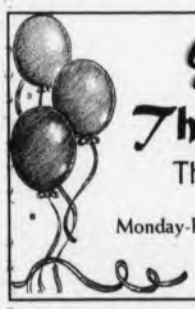
In a normal capital project, the state would put out to bid the project's design, have the project designed, then put out the construction of the project to bid. Under a design/build method, a contractor is hired to design, build and pay for the project, and the state will pay them back an agreed upon amount.

"What is normally done, is you come up with a complete design down to what type of lights there is going to be," Carlisle said. Design/build will allow the MBTA to design certain parts of the final project while building it. "Maybe we can decide on what kind of traffic lights there's going to be at a later date and focus on the here and now," he said. "We'll work on some portions as we go along."

Carlisle said work could start as early as next summer, and be completed in 2005.

But Hedlund and Bradley, both strongly anti-Greenbush, are nervous of the untested strategy.

As a member of the Senate Committee on Transportation, Hedlund gave the go-ahead for Route 3 North to be a design/build project, the first time that had been allowed for a state project in Massachusetts. But he isn't as excited about using the same strategy for Greenbush. "I don't think [design/build] is necessarily a bad thing if used for the right type of project, but this isn't the right type," he said.



"We got to try something for the first time somewhere," Carlisle argued. "We had enough success with the groundbreaking of Route 3, we deemed it beneficial."

But Bradley disagrees. "Using this type of approach is risky," he said. "It's only been tried once and that project isn't done. It's very situational...To take a road project and apply it to a train is like comparing apples and oranges. It hasn't been tested in this market."

Bradley said design/build method has been used in only a few other states and while it was used successfully in California, it didn't in New Jersey.

Hedlund pointed out that Modern Continental, the contractor for the Route 3 widening project, recently said the $800 million appropriated for that project won't be enough, and is asking for more.

"They feel they can take on the added expense of a 20-year commitment to this project, and fit it in their operating budget, then so be it, it's legitimate for them to do that," Hedlund said. "But I feel they have ignored the issues raised in the McGovern report."

Cohasset School Committee's contention that a rising student enrollment rate is the driving force behind its proposed 7.3 percent budget increase this year.

Cohasset's growth was far from the largest on the South Shore — that honor fell to Kingston which saw its population jump more than 30 percent — but it was also far from the lowest. Avon, Dedham, Holbrook and Braintree, all Norfolk County communities, saw with no growth or actually lost residents. Interestingly, no Plymouth County town or city saw negative growth. The lowest was Hingham, which experienced just 0.3 percent growth over the past 10 years.

District wide, the 10th Congressional District, represented by U.S. Rep. William Delahunt, D-Quincy, which includes most of the South Shore, reported the highest growth rate of any Congressional District in the state, punching in at 10.3 percent growth.

According to town building department records, new building permits for single-family homes skyrocketed in the latter half of the 90's. From 1990 to 1995, 39 permits were filed with the building department. But from 1996 to 2000, there were 84.

Perhaps the most interesting statistic is that Cohasset's minority population doubled, albeit from 0.9 percent to 1.8 percent. Asians make Cohasset's largest ethnic group, with 55 residents, or 0.76 percent. The black population in town actually dropped, from 20 residents in 1990 to 13 in 2000.

Part of the reason could be attributed to the new option of allowing residents to identify themselves as "multi-racial." Forty-two residents marked that selection on their form.

Cohasset Diversity Committee chairman Susan Etkind said it was "reassuring" to see the increase, though small, of the minority population in town. "Personally, as someone who embraces diversity, I think it adds a lot to this town," she said. "The best way to recruit people is to treat them with respect and to have an inclusive environment including a school system that addresses the different ethnicities."

She also said the census showings are further proof of the importance of a program like METCO in the school system. "It's important that even those in the majority in whatever way, reach out and support and foster our children's curiosity, so when they head off to college they're not totally shocked," she said.

Forum rejects one-way South Main Street

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Attendees at the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's public forum on Monday were unified about one aspect of the presented village improvement plan: don't make South Main Street one-way.

The proposal, which would send traffic through the village southward down South Main Street, and make Elm Street one-way towards the Common, was one of many presented by David O'Connor of The Cecil Group, CRC's engineers, and by far had the least support.

"If you have something that will improve the downtown, people would say great," said Spring Street resident Robert Martin. "But I haven't heard anyone complain about the traffic [on South Main Street]...This traffic pattern will not work."

The major concern residents at the forum had with the plan is the effect the one-way pattern would have on businesses that rely on north-bound morning commuters for their financial viability.

O'Connor argued that the businesses would have the evening commute traffic flow directed by their shops, instead of the morning commute.

But Parker Street resident Russ Bonetti said places like Tedeschi's, French Memories and Dependable Cleaners all depend on commuters stopping by in the morning.

"Cohasset Village in the morning is a lot different than Cohasset Village in the evening commute," said Bonetti. "No one's in the village after 6 p.m."

He also said the emphasis in the village shouldn't be on aesthetics, instead on encouraging commercial growth. "What attracts people to the downtown isn't brick sidewalks, it's the businesses," Bonetti said.

"Cohasset Village works the way it is," Martin said.

Texaco gas station owner George Roukounakis said he also would lose business to Route 3A if cars had to circle around the village in order to enter his station.

A proposal to keep South Main Street two-ways, but make Elm Street, from Brook Street to the South Main Street intersection, one-way, met with a warmer reception. The one-way Elm Street is being pushed because of pedestrian safety concerns, if the narrow street is kept as a two-way.

O'Connor said by making Elm Street a one-way, it would free up enough space to install four-foot sidewalks on both sides of the street, keep on-street parking, and have enough room to allow emergency vehicles past. He used photos to demonstrate the current condition where cars park up on the "sidewalk." O'Connor said the town could not keep the street two-way, without sacrificing one of the sidewalks

Peter Briere, a traffic engineer with the BSC Group, working on the plan, said he would not be willing to stamp a plan that did not include a sidewalk on both sides. "When people go downtown, they expect to have sidewalks," he said.

The plan was received favorably by a number of those in attendance.

"I like this plan," said Dick Avery. He said he didn't like the one-way South Main Street proposal, but thought it was "logical" to make the short stretch of Elm Street one-way.

Bonetti raised concern whether trailers hauling boats towards Cohasset Harbor in the spring would be able to make the right hand turn from Brook Street onto Elm Street.

Briere said they can, but would have to cross over the other side of the road to complete the turn.

The proposed sidewalk along St. Stephen's also received some debate. Some said the $170,000 sidewalk must be completed to make the walk from the Common to the village safer. Others said pedestrians just need to be trained to cross over to the other side and they will be safe.

"That white line does not designate a sidewalk," said Martin. "It's a traffic line."

Robert Davenport of Black Horse Lane said if crosswalks were constructed to prevent people from walking along the rocky edge, he was "very doubtful" anyone would use them. He said he was in favor of a plan that would chip away at the granite ledge between one and four feet, install a new sidewalk, and change the parking pattern across the street from angled to parallel.

A quick survey by CRC Executive Director Dean Rizzo showed the forum leaned "60/40" in favor of the sidewalk . He also reminded those in attendance that the St. Stephen's sidewalk was authorized by a Town Meeting vote a number of years ago, and has the grant money needed to do the $179,000 project sitting in a bank account.

"The sidewalk will remain on the plans," Rizzo said. "Until it is decided at a Town Meeting a sidewalk is no longer appropriate, we will continue to include it."

O'Connor also presented three redesign options for the Elm/Margin Street intersection. One called for the closure of Elm Street between the CRC headquarters, and the traffic island, and the other called for Margin Street to be closed adjacent to the traffic island. Neither received as much of a positive response as a stop sign at the traffic island.

Hingham Symphony presents Masterworks II

Hingham Symphony Orchestra will perform its Masterworks II concert Saturday, April 7, at 8 p.m., in Sanborn Auditorium, Hingham Town Hall. Music director Jin Kim, known for his creative programming, will conduct three works for full orchestra, Ives Symphony No. 2, Smetana's "Die Moldau," and "The Chairman Dances," by contemporary composer John Adams.

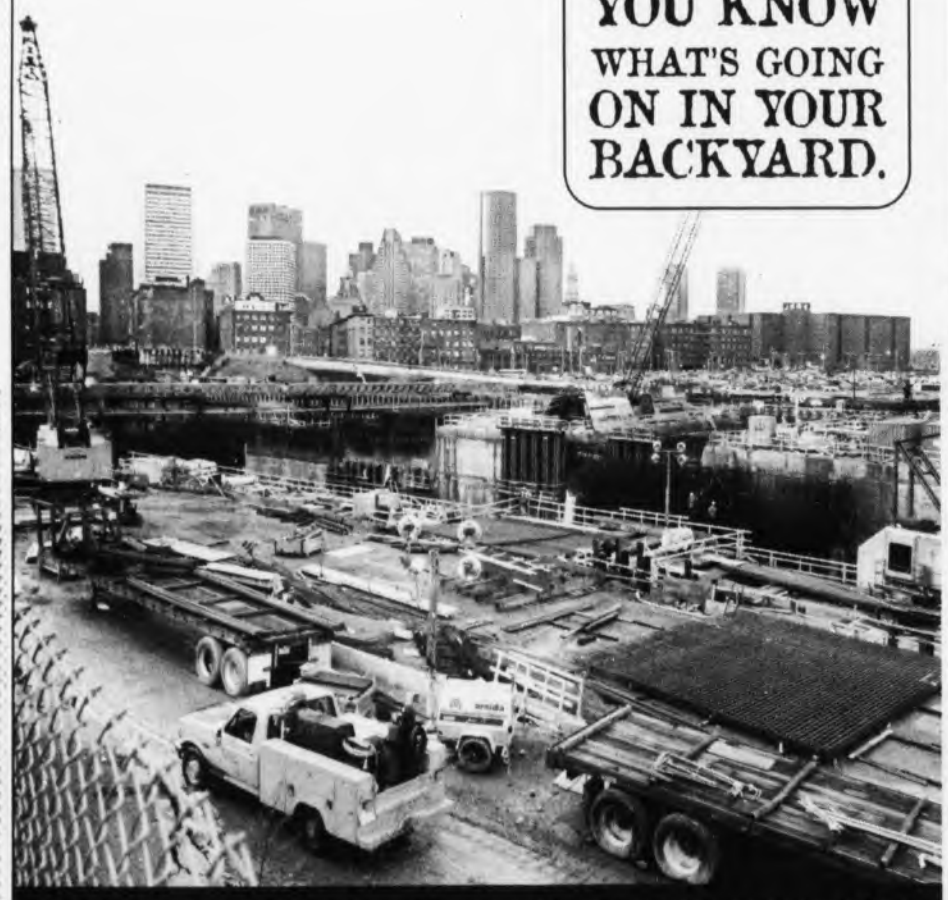
Adams has composed works that are among the best known and most frequently performed of contemporary American music. In these works he has taken minimalism into a new and fresh terrain characterized by luminous sound and a powerful and dramatic approach to form. Charles Ives, a Connecticut native, completed his charming and spirited second symphony in 1902. Smetana's "Die Moldau," part of a symphonic poem written in 1879, takes us on a musical journey down the famous Czech river. These works will be explained in greater depth by Jin Kim in a free pre-concert lecture at 7 p.m. Audience members are invited to meet members of the orchestra at a reception following the concert.

This concert is the orchestra's second-to-last of the season — the Pops concerts May 5 and 6 will cap another year of growth.

Tickets ($20 adults, $18 seniors and $10 age 18 and under) are available in advance at Noble's, Hingham Square; Hingham Public Library; Cards & Shards, Cohasset; or call (781) 740-5694 to reserve.

Children's April vacation art

The Children's Creativity Workshop is offering several art activities for April vacation. The series meets April 16-20.



Colors of Spring is designed for ages children 5 to 8 years old and takes place 9 to 10:30 a.m. each day. Boys and girls will experience building a palette of colors using a variety of colored clays. Techniques for creating with this exciting media will be presented. Miniature scenes that reflect the season will be sculpted by each student.

Beginning Acrylic Painting, for ages 9 to 14, takes place from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. each day. Students will learn the basics of acrylic painting. The emphasis of this series will be understanding the color wheel, translating values, light and shadow. Students will complete a painting with more of an understanding of the elementary concepts of color and design.

A supply list will be given prior to the class.

Painting Workshop is for students who have completed the beginners series and takes place from 2 to 4 p.m. each day. Students can further study the aspects of composition, color mixing and choosing a subject. Several paintings will be completed. A supply list will be given prior to the workshop.

Registration for this series and the summer program is now open. Call (781) 749-5923 and visit www.childrenscreativity.com for more detailed information.

Environmental study gives runway a lift

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

A massive environmental impact study of a proposal to build a new Logan Airport runway is bound to stir some controversy.

Project opponents vow to continue the fight as they examine its contents closely.

Despite the outcry of South Shore and other communities that would be most affected by the runway, the executive summary of the 12-volume supplemental Draft Environmental Impact Statement lists building Runway 14/32 and other improvements as the "preferred alternative."

Because Logan is expected to continue to function as the region's main long-haul and international gateway, the report says, regional transportation options will not eliminate the need for the proposed improvements at Logan.

Logan is currently sixth in the country on the list of delay-prone airports.

The study states a significant portion of Logan's delay problem can be remedied and safety enhanced by correcting a deficiency in the runway system and remedying "inefficiencies and bottlenecks" in the airfield's taxiway system.

"The preferred alternative virtually eliminates delays that can be controlled, particularly those occurring during northwest winds," according to the report.

The supplemental draft environmental study asserts that by mitigating the environmental impacts associated with the new runway proposal, the operational benefits of the proposed improvements can be accomplished without significant environmental consequences.

In fact, the study claims the new runway would reduce the environmental impact, increase over-water aircraft operations and result in better air quality than would the "no action" alternative.

Noise impacts over East Boston, Revere and Winthrop are expected to be reduced, according to the report, but Mary Ann Frye, a member of Hingham's jet noise task force, questions that assertion.

At a hearing about the proposed runway held Monday by Mayor Thomas Menino, who opposes the project, Frye made some observations of her own.

"I saw 100s of people from Boston communities, and they have no sense this project will bring them any relief," Frye said.

Locally, runway opponents are asking, What about the South Shore?

"The wild card in all of this is air quality," said Richard Goldhammer, a member of Hingham's Jet Noise Task Force. "No one knows what the effect will be on our health when close to 100,000 planes flying annually over our town emit known carcinogens like benzene and other volatile organic compounds into the air we breathe. A growing number of public health studies around the country suggest it will be a serious health concern."

On the other hand, Massport contends the new runway will reduce noise, pollution and congestion at Logan by moving as many as 75,000 flights a year over Boston Harbor.

Opponents balk at that assertion, because studies they've been involved with indicate the South Shore will be negatively impacted even if jets fly an "over water" route.

"The South Shore needs to replace the false image Massport has implanted about 'over the water operations' not going over homes," Frye said. "Boston Harbor is tiny in relation to the speed of jets, and they are on top of neighborhoods a minute from the airport, unless they go east."

According to Goldhammer, the model flight tracks for aircraft on all existing runways as shown in the supplemental draft environmental impact statement indicate Hingham will be "blanketed by jet operations that will virtually ensure most of the town will be adversely impacted."

Some Hingham and other South Shore neighborhoods are already experiencing high noise levels, even without the additional flights overhead.

Hingham resident Thomas Maloney and his family are already losing sleep at night because of the noise from jets.

"We wake up suddenly , startled out of our sleep but not always recognizing at first what woke us up," he said. "Interrupting sleep patterns is not healthy."

The runway is expected to increase air traffic over the South Shore by about 35 percent. That's inconceivable to many residents who are already bearing the burden of high noise levels during all hours of the day or night.

Not coincidentally, voters at the April 23 Hingham Town Meeting will be asked to support a warrant article authorizing an appropriation of $30,000 to the South Shore Aviation Fund to assess noise and pollution impacts associated with the runway plan.

The entire environmental impact study will be available for public review at Hingham Public Library this week as well as the Hull, Braintree and Quincy libraries.

The federal comment period for the supplemental DEIS will be open until May 7. Citizens on either side of the issue who would like their views aired about the supplemental DEIS should address their remarks to: John C. Silva, Manager, Environmental Programs, Airports Division, ANE-600, FAA New England Region, 12 New England Executive Park, Burlington, MA 01803.

The office of Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, has copies of the executive summary of the Draft Environmental Impact Statement. To obtain a copy, call (617) 722-1646. The summary may also be viewed at www.massport.com.

For further information about the supplemental DEIS, call Massport's Office of Government and Community Affairs at (617) 568-3711.

The state comment period for the final Environmental Impact Report, which is being released concurrently with the supplemental DEIS, ends May 11. Those wishing to make comments may address them to: Secretary of Environmental Affairs, ATTN: MEPA OFFICE, Mr. Arthur Pugsley – EOEA No. 10458, 251 Causeway St., Boston, MA 02114.

Public hearing

A joint federal/state public hearing is scheduled for Wednesday, April 25, at 3 and 6 p.m. at the Radisson Hotel Boston, Convention Center Rooms A&B, 6th Floor, 200 Stuart St., Boston, MA 02116. The purpose of the hearing is to receive comments on economic, social and environmental effects of the proposed runway and consistency with local planning. Residents of affected communities will also have a chance to comment about new flight patterns arriving and departing from Logan Airport associated with the proposal.

But one day to comment on a project of that magnitude isn't enough, Goldhammer said.

"People should not only be concerned about the runway impacts but taking action by demanding that more than the scheduled one day of public commentary in Boston be held so South Shore residents can make comments," he said. "Those will be the most impacted communities by far."

If the plan goes through, Runway 1432 could bring an additional 100,000 jet arrivals and departures annually to Logan Airport. The vast majority – 75,000 – are expected to fly over the South Shore.

If appropriated at Hingham Town Meeting, the $30,000 would be used in conjunction with funds allocated by other South Shore communities to pay for research concerning the air pollution impact and possible health hazards associated with jet emissions, noise monitors and potential legal proceedings if necessary.

Some time ago, Massport's application to the Federal Aviation Administration for clearance to construct the new runway resulted in a request for further study.

The Federal Aviation Administration developed the supplemental environmental study in consultation with an advisory panel consisting of three representatives appointed by Boston Mayor Thomas Menino and Gov. Paul Cellucci.

According to John Silva, manager of environmental projects for the Federal Aviation Administration, the document addresses the environmental aspects of Runway 1432, the expected effects of the 5,000-foot runway, an analysis of the area's regional airport system and responses to questions posed by Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand about the proposal.

The study also provides information about what types of aircraft are expected to use the runway — including smaller 50- to 60-seat turbo jets, which Silva claims incorporate the "quietest" technology possible. The report also includes enhanced flight track maps.

"These filings commence the final phase of an exhaustive public review process that began six years ago," wrote Massport CEO and executive director Virginia Buckingham in a letter to Hingham selectmen recently. "Runway 1432 provides significant cost savings and competitive gains for the economy."

Still, she added, Massport will continue to aggressively divert traffic away from Logan by further developing a strong regional transportation system.

Project opponents couldn't disagree more with Massport's assertions and remain focused on air quality and noise pollution issues.

"It's extremely important for us to realize what's happening with Massport," said Maloney. "Air traffic is and will continue to be a major problem area."

Opponents want runway grounded

By Carol Britton Meyer

Amid rising opposition to a proposed new runway at Logan Airport, a recently released environmental impact study indicates the project should get the green light. (See related story).

Opponents cite noise and air pollution issues as key reasons why plans to build Runway 14/32 should be nixed.

"While the [Hingham] selectmen have taken this issue very seriously, it doesn't seem like residents really understand the magnitude and extent of the impact," said Richard Goldhammer, a member of the Hingham Jet Noise Task Force. "You cannot coax airplanes into narrow arrival and departure quarters without them sweeping out all over Hingham."

Gov. Paul Cellucci assured community activists opposed to the new runway recently that "we are still listening," according to a published report.

Still, he hopes final approval for the new runway will be attained by the end of the summer.

"Short of building a new runway, the state has done everything it can to ease congestion at Logan," Cellucci said recently.

The Bush Administration has indicated nationwide runway expansions are a critical component of addressing delay issues.

Project opponents aren't happy with that news and claim the environmental impact statement does not constitute an unbiased review of the project.

"Those of us investigating the air traffic issues for the town have learned several things," said Goldhammer. "The towns of Hingham, Cohasset, Hull and Weymouth are the communities targeted by Massport and the Federal Aviation Administration to receive the huge increase in jet traffic."

If the new runway does get the "go ahead" and obtains the necessary state and federal approvals, there's still a court battle to face over whether to lift a longstanding court injunction against further expanding Logan.

Sen. Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth), who is among those opposing the new runway proposal, favors a regional plan to meet the growing need for air transportation.

"Sometimes it seems like it's David against Goliath," he said. "I've been pleading with congressmen and senators to look at the issue. It's frustrating. The project isn't right, because it's not good transportation policy."

The Massport noise abatement line is open 24 hours a day. Hingham and other South Shore residents with concerns about noise from air traffic may call (617) 561-3333. Press "2" when the tape comes on.

Other voices

Bijoy M. Misra, fifth speaker for The Glastonbury Series, "Listening to Other Voices: the Way of Prayer in Our Religious Traditions," will discuss "Prayer for the Hindus," Thursday, April 5, at 7:15 p.m. at Glastonbury Abbey. The event is sponsored by The Benedictine community of Glastonbury Abbey. Call the monastery to reserve a place (781) 749-2155.

In this fifth of six lectures, writer, teacher and scholar Misra explores prayer as an integral part of Hindu worship. In the Hindu tradition, prayer is invocation or praise and may be spoken or silent. Sound holds a principle role in Hindu cosmology; the chant Aum simulates the primordial energy or vibration which Hindu theology conceives as the basis of the universe. Silent prayer is part of yoga and the ultimate state of the yogi — discipline, control and withdrawal of the senses so that eventually all activities become an offering to the Lord and work itself becomes a prayer.

Misra is associated with the New England Hindu Temple at Ashland, is on the faculty of computer science at Harvard Extension School and serves as a consultant at Harvard Medical School. He is the convener of the Outreach Committee of the Department of Sanskrit and Indian Studies at Harvard University and teaches in the Indian Cultural School in Burlington.

Serving up a few winners

Both tennis programs look strong this year

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

With a surprisingly strong boys team and perennial sectional crown contenders on the girls side of things, the Cohasset tennis program will be turning some heads this year.

Headed up by tenth year coach Sarah "Gigi" Meehan for the girls and rookie Cohasset coach Pam Wilson for the boys, the teams both appear to be among the cream of the crop to beat in a wide open South Shore League.

"I think we are going to have a fantastic year," said Wilson, who has coached at the prominent tennis club Rye Racket in New York, a training ground for several prominent figures on the worlds tennis scene, Jennifer Capriatti among them.

The girls have made the post-season every year over the last decade with Meehan at the helm. And this year's team appears to be among the more impressive of her tenure.

"In 10 years, we have never not made [tournament]," reported Meehan, who had a four year regular season winning streak broken last year by league rival Norwell. "It is a really great thing, but there is a little bit of pressure."

The girls team will most likely have last year's undefeated second singles player, sophomore Lindsay Grossman, taking over the number one position opened up by the graduation of Kate Stone.

"She is showing some signs of promise of being the number one player," said Meehan. "She is so mentally strong, I think she can beat anyone."

2000's third singles player, sophomore Julie Shea, could be playing first or second singles. Of course, if she had her druthers, she'd prefer first doubles.

"Julie could give [Grossman] a great run for her money," asserted Meehan, smiling.

"Julie is leaning towards doubles, but she is so strong either way."

Senior captain Arianna Afshar and junior Kelly Stone, the only two upper classmen on the team, could very well team up to be a terrific doubles team.

Sophomores Molly Flanagan, Taylor O'Brien and Nicole Needle have been impressing Meehan by playing "fabulous tennis."

"They have some good experience," noted the coach.

Still, Meehan admits it is a bit too early in the season to have any lineup set in stone.

"I am just gonna let 'em duke it out," she laughed.

On the boys side, senior Erik Shea, who is in his first year playing for the Skippers, looks to be the top player on the boys team. Shea, one of the primary contributors this school year to the surprisingly successful Cohasset High soccer and basketball teams, brings great athleticism to the court. In previous springs, Shea played soccer for the elite Crusaders Club Team.

"I think he is going to do so well," offered Wilson, "because he has both discipline and skill."

Second singles will most likely be senior captain Chris Golden, who performed extremely well earlier this year on both the football field and the in the pool as a co-captain of the swim team.

At third singles, a budding sophomore looks to make up for some lost time as he missed all of last year

Smoothing things out on the diamond

Baseball team prepares for Tuesday's season opener

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Baseball season is underway, and the Cohasset squad looks to have quite a season ahead of them.

"We will be highly competitive," stated fourth year coach Robert Knurek, seldom one to make bold pre-season judgments.

Still, after making the tournament last year with a 11-9 regular season record, the Skippers will be looking to a core of four seniors to lead the team back to the playoffs. Cohasset was eliminated last year in the first round 4-2, losing to Westwood's number one starter, one of the premiere lefties in Div. 3.

Even with four non-league games coming against powerful baseball programs in Hingham, Scituate and two against Avon, playoff qualification seems very doable.

"I expect to make the tournament if we play up to our potential," said Knurek.

Leading the way will have be senior co-captains Doug O'Brien and TJ Bilodeau, two of the three captains that led the basketball Skippers to their 14-8 record this past winter.

O'Brien led the league in batting average last year, hitting over .400. Far from a one-side threat, the senior is also an extremely strong centerfielder.

Bilodeau, who was also named captain last year as a junior, will split time as a pitcher and a shortstop, but this knowledgeable senior can be put virtually anywhere on the field.

"TJ can play any position on the field, including catcher," said Knurek without a hint of sarcasm, impressed with how well Bilodeau knows the game.

While Bilodeau pitches, the responsibilities of shortstop will be taken by AAU standout Nick Bolster, who also is one of the top pitchers on the staff. Knurek mentioned Bolster's strength lies in his great arm speed, which was on show last season when he hurled a no-hit shutout.

Senior Tim Grassey, a workhouse of a pitcher with an impressive pitch selection, will see plenty of innings at the number three spot in the rotation.

"He has improved a lot," assessed Knurek. "He has great offspeed stuff, and he throws it for strikes."

Junior third basemen/leftfielder Robin Murphy will play at both positions this year. He has been a starter for the varsity since his freshman year.

Junior infielder Chris Caron has hit the ball solidly, and after being

7th grade hoopsters defend OCL crown

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset's seventh grade girls basketball team, by far the smallest in the Old Colony League, shocked all of the favorites on its way to a second straight OCL championship, which the team grabbed with an upset win over favored Bridgewater this weekend.

Before shocking second place Bridgewater in the final game with a 21-12 victory, the Cohasset girls took down Whitman/Hanson in the first round and the top ranked undefeated Duxbury in the semifinals by the same score of 21-12. Not bad for a team that finished fifth in the league with a regular season record of 5-3.

Bridgewater started off the championship game with a quick bucket, and managed to keep Cohasset scoreless for close to six minutes. But after power forward Caitlin James started the Skippers' scoring with a lay-up, Cohasset never trailed again.

"Caitlin James is very aggressive and very strong," said co-coach Jeff Grossman of his 'big man' who fouled out with seven minutes left in the game.

Grossman's daughter Chelsea, the starting point guard for the team, led Cohasset in the playoffs with 18 points, including eight in the opening round win over W-H.

Grossman also led the way on defense with three steals, tying her for team tops with small forward/shooting guard Mia Lieb-Lappen, who also had a team-high seven rebounds.

The defense has been key for this team all year, and that continued in the playoffs, as witnessed by the opponents' first half outputs of six, two and three points, respectively.

"We win with defense," asserted co-coach Ed Lappen, father of Mia. "People cannot score against us."

This team utilized an extended 2-3 zone all year, with guards Grossman, Lieb-Lappen and Aly Belz, who splits time at the point with Chelsea, trapping.

In fact, those three combined to draw eight of Bridgewater's 17 fouls while driving to the hoop.

But this win can by no means be considered the work of just a few players. While the opponents had only four of their players put the ball in the basket, Cohasset put eight of its 10 players in the scorebook.

"I was very impressed," effused Ed Lappen. "Everyone contributed; it was a total team effort."

Other standout performers in the finals were Belz, who combined with Grossman to repeatedly break full court presses throughout the tourney, Cally Ernst, the center who led the offense against Bridgewater with six points and five boards, and Emily Savage, who came off the bench to be a presence inside with five rebounds.

Many of the top performers on the team— including Grossman, Lieb-Lappen, Belz, and center Lisa Musto— were members of the 9-3 girls Middle School team headed up by coach Tony Rolfe.

"They are a real good group of athletes," noted Jeff Grossman, who feels the 17 wins in one year cannot hurt as they head towards the HighSchool level. "Several of these girls will play on varsity."

Cohasset High's varsity girls coach Ellen Carr was in attendance for both the Duxbury and Bridgewater games, and is most assuredly pleased with what she has as a nucleus for the future.

Next year, the girls will attempt to make a clean sweep at the 8th grade level, the highest offered within the Old Colony League.

Statistics for this article were provided by assistant coach Ross Lieb-Lappen, a sophomore at Cohasset High School and a member of the JV basketball team.

Cohasset sophomores Grossman and Peraino named honorable mentions

The individuals you see honored here are the 12 we determined through research and personal observation to be the top female high school basketball players in Marinerland (i.e. Abington, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Kingston, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Rockland and Scituate).

As you might imagine, this was no easy task. Several of the girls recognized as High Honorable Mentions received serious consideration for All-Scholastic honors.

Likewise, a few of the Honorable Mentions received serious consideration for higher honor, with Cohasset High sophomores Lindsay Grossman and Heather Peraino being among these. Both underclassmen contributed better than 11 points per game for the up and coming Lady Skippers program season. We're already anticipating that both girls will receive strong consideration for the All-Scholastic team next year.

Strong field expected for Sunday's Race by the Sea

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The calendar says spring officially kicked in on March 21 but Cohasset residents and members of the running community know differently. Spring, for the locals, won't start until the gun sounds at 1 p.m. this Sunday and a field of upwards of 1,000 runners surges forward from the town common at the 25th Annual Cohasset Road Race by-the-sea 10K.

Along with the Hingham 4th of July Road Race, Cohasset is one of the most popular on the South Shore and easily the most scenic. It has been voted one of the 50 most scenic races in New England Runner magazine, though hardly an easy course.

As has been the cases in past years, weather conditions on race day will determine how many runners toe the starting line on Cohasset Common for the challenging 6.2-mile course, the highlight of which is the winding section along Jerusalem Road.

Last year's race was another huge success as 804 runners crossed the finish line under a sun-drenched sky. Kingston's John Noland, one of the most prolific runners on the South Shore, won easily in 33 minutes, 12 seconds, a cool 5:22-per-mile pace. On the women's side, Katie Payson of Jamaica Plain ran away with first place with a time of 39:28. And one of the race's most recognizable faces, Robert Chasen of Weymouth, took the Master's division in 34:12. The race has averaged 753 finishers since 1996, making it one of the biggest races on the South Shore.

The race has long been used by runners as a final tuneup for the Boston Marathon and this year should be no different as several competitors in the Hopkinton-to-Boston classic will test just how their winter of training for the April 16 race panned out with a solid 10K (6.2 miles) effort.

And the effort will surely be there, particularly if conditions are less than ideal. If runners are greeted by cool, sunny conditions, history has shown there will be a bigger turnout. A raw, rainy day makes the race all the tougher, especially along Jerusalem Road where the winds off the Atlantic can make for some hard running.

The race's fabulous ocean view along Jerusalem Road is tempered somewhat by the rolling hills, culminated by the tough, uphill grind on Forest Ave. The final two miles of the race are the fastest as runners can gain momentum along the rolling hills on Forest Ave. and hit the flats again when they take the left-hand turn onto North Main Street for the final 1-1/2 miles to the finish in front of Cohasset Town Hall.

The day kicks off with the 10K walk, beginning at Sandy Beach at 10 a.m. The walk has grown in popularity in past years and this Sunday should be no different. If the weather is favorable, look for a large field of walkers.

Applications are available at www.roadracebythesea.com and in Cohasset at Curtis Liquors, Good Sport, Noble's Camera Shop, and mail from the Cohasset Rotary, P.O. Box 36, Cohasset, MM 02025, or send email with your mailing address to tlg@dreamcom.net.

The registration fee for the race is $12 prior to March 25, and $15 after. The registration fee for the walk is $12.

On-site registration will be held at the South Shore Community Center, 3 North Main St., Cohasset on Saturday, March 31, at 9 a.m. until noon and Sunday, April 1, 9 a.m. until noon. For race questions call (781) 383-2811 or send email to tlg@dreamcom.net.

Competitors are urged to park in the Music Circus lot on Sohier Street, the Town Central lot across the street from the community center or the Osgood School lot.

Erik Shea, playing his first year of tennis for C.H.S, will look to carry over his success this year from the soccer fields and basketball court this spring, as he takes over the top singles spot on the team.

while recovering from surgery. However, he requested that his name not be used.

The first doubles team consists of senior Jeff Scribner and junior Joe Niessink, who may see some time playing singles also this year.

Competing for a spot on second doubles team are freshman Rob Carpenter and brothers Casey (senior) and Jessie (freshman) Brewer, both first year players.

"I was pleasantly surprised with how strong out boys team is," said Wilson of her line-up, as she has set up challenge matches to determine the latter. "All of them have great skill."

Between the two teams, there are 20 high school players, half of whom are playing their first year at the varsity level. But rather than being disappointed with the lack of experience, both coaches seem excited about the interest of the rookies.

"It is going to be fun," grinned Meehan, who had four new freshman and a sophomore join her team this year. "We have a lot of 'new blood', which is nice."

called up from the junior varsity midway through last year, has proved he can compete at the varsity level.

Junior catcher Tim Straughan, who may also see some innings this year as a reliever, has a cannon of an arm, and is expected to be one of the main power threats in the Skippers' line-up.

Other possible relief pitchers for the squad this year include last year's JV ace Matt O'Grodnik and any number of talented freshmen and sophomores, currently being coached by JV Skipper Peter Lucido.

Knurek is quick to point out that the South Shore League contains some of the most experienced coaches and some of the most respected programs around.

In fact, three coaches in the SSL alone have over 300 career wins in their school.

"South Shore League baseball is phenomenal baseball," effused Knurek. "The baseball we play is real competitive."

The Skippers will open the season on the road Tuesday afternoon against South Shore League rival Hanover High (3:30 start).

record breaking 23 win season, which ended in the Div. 3 South Sectional finals against eventual state champion Westwood... passed the 1,000 plateau in her junior year....led the South Shore League in scoring this season with 20.2 points per game...Has accepted a basketball scholarship from Bryant College, a partial for her freshman year that will become a full ride for her last three years...Also played soccer for Norwell High, serving as team captain this past fall...plays AAU basketball year round...Norwell Coach Bill Gerety: "Jessie is one of most intense players I've ever coached. She is just incredibly focussed and determined when she's on the floor. As valuable as she obviously was at the offensive end, she was probably just as valuable as a defender. She usually matched up against the toughest player and did a great job of creating turnovers that led to easy baskets at the other end."

Maeve Barao - Guard
Senior (Capt.) - Norwell

Maeve Barao

Ran the offense for the Lady Clippers this season, helping the team to a record breaking 23 win season, which ended in the South Sectional finals against eventual state champion Westwood... Assist totals aren't always kept, but Norwell coach Bill Gerety, a teacher and coach at Norwell High since it opened in 1966, said Maeve had "more assists than any girl I can remember coming through here."...Despite being primarily a facilitator, the point guard finished her career with close to 1,200 points, ...served as team captain this season, along with Jessie Weber....proved her mettle in one of biggest games of years, shaking off an abysmal shooting game to score eight of her 14 points in the final three minutes of the down-to-the-wire quarterfinal win over Abington on 4-of-5 shooting... Norwell coach Bill Gerety: "Maeve is one of the most unselfish players I've ever coached. She could have gone over 1,000 points a long time ago for us, but I've asked her to concentrate more on other facets of her game for the good of the team, and she did that."

Bridget Driscoll - Forward
Junior - Hingham

Bridget Driscoll

Was the team's top point-getter and rebounder for the second-place Patriot League Harborwomen, averaging 10 points per game and seven rebounds per game... A two-time Patriot League All-star, Driscoll was key on the inside for Hingham, often putting back second opportunities at the hoop and scoring breakaway layups...She was also a fixture on defense inside the paint...Out of Hingham's four all-stars, Driscoll was the only unanimous pick by the league's coaches... Driscoll is most proud of her performance in her team's second meeting with cross-town rival Notre Dame, in which she scored 14 points in the revenge win... Hingham coach Dave Hickey: "We have a lot of girls who score, but Bridget was the only one who was consistent. She was the only kid who stepped up every game. She was like having a coach on the floor. I always knew what I was going to get from her."

Brittany Cheney - Center
Junior - Abington

Brittany Cheney

Probably the most versatile player on the South Shore, Cheney's talent is almost unmatchable...Her ability to score from anywhere and her even more impressive rebounding abilities were key for the second-place South Shore League Abington team...A three-year starter, Cheney nabbed double-doubles in nearly all of her games, finishing with averages of 16 points and 12 rebounds per game... Standing at 5'10", Cheney shined in the Green Wave's opening round Div. 3 South Sectional match-up against East Bridgewater, in which she virtually shutdown the team's 6'3" center, Bridget Larkin...An excellent defensive player, Cheney was arguably the SSL's premier shot-blocker and also finished among the league leaders in steals...Three-time SSL All-Star, Cheney has already been named a tri-captain for next season...Cheney was also a Mariner All-Scholastic soccer goalie last fall...Abington coach Mike Mayhew: "Brittany is just a terrific athlete and basketball player, but her biggest strength is her competitiveness. She's at her best in big moments. All season long, when we needed a big hoop or rebound or defensive stop, she just found a way to get it done."

Stephanie Morrissey - Forward
Sophomore - Abington

Stephanie Morrissey

A two-time South Shore League All-star, Morrissey was the team's second high scorer averaging 15 points per game...Had a great eye for playmaking, leading the team in assists... Morrissey was a force on the inside for Abington with her impressive drives to the hoop, but she was also a long-range threat, as witnessed by her two clutch three-pointers in the Green Wave's nail-bitter loss to SSL rival Norwell in the Div. 3 South Sectional quarterfinals...Basketball is by far her first love, though she also runs track for Abington High...Plays AAU basketball year round, taking part in several national tournaments... Interestingly, her best friend on the AAU Under-15 team is Sarah Cox, a standout for SSL arch-rival Norwell...Abington coach Mike Mayhew: "Basketball is just Stephanie's thing. She really loves it and that shows whenever she's on the court. She's just a very good all around player: inside-outside, at the defensive end, on the boards, you name it. And she's also very knowledgeable."

Second Team

Sarah Cox - Forward/guard
Sophomore - Norwell

Sarah Cox

The sophomore is well on her way to a remarkable career at Norwell High, having scored well over 600 points in her first two years...The 5-foot-9 forward/guard does it all for the Lady Clippers: scoring, rebounding, defending, handling the ball and passing.... averaged 16.8 points per game this season, second to teammate Jessie Weber in the South Shore League...also averaged over 11 rebounds per game, and had two games in which she grabbed more than 20...A South Shore League All-Star both this year and as a freshman, when she averaged 13.1 points per game... although only a sophomore, she's already received recruitment overtures from colleges... Norwell Head coach Bill Gerety: "I knew we were going to have a good team, but Sarah made us a great team. I knew we had two very good players in Maeve (Barao) and Jessie (Weber), but Sarah really stepped up to make this a special season. She's just an unbelievably complete player for someone her age. It's scary to think how god she could be."

Melissa Murphy - Guard
Sophomore - Rockland

Melissa Murphy

A first-year Patriot League All-star, this speedy young guard was a force for Rockland... Her stellar defense and quick feet produced an average five steals per game, providing the most productive offense of defense for the Lady Bulldogs... Her average 15.6 points per game placed her among the PL's top three point-getters for third-place Rockland...A second-year varsity player and PL All-star, Murphy had a nice outside shot and led the team in assists with an average four per game...Standing at just 5'4", Murphy still wasn't afraid to drive to the hoop against larger defenders and provided some stellar offense as a result...Will be among the team's top returnees. Rockland coach Madeline Lannin-Cotton: "She's really fun to watch. She's small, but her speed makes up for her lack of size. She plays great defense and has a nice outside shot."

Jackie Gilman - Center
Senior (Capt.) - Marshfield

Jackie Gilman

Standing at 6'2", Gilman was coach Bruce Emerson's "go-to girl" on offense, averaging 16 points per game, and adding a dozen rebounds per game...Her efforts on defense also produced an average five blocked shots per game...An Atlantic Coast League All-star, Gilman scored 783 career points, including 320 this year...Gilman is considering continuing her basketball career at Salve Regina. Marshfield coach Bruce Emerson: "She's just a great person. As a basketball player, she just keeps getting better. If we can get the ball to Jackie, we can score. She has good hands, she can catch just about anything, and she has a soft shot that's very accurate."

Katie Alexander - Forward
Junior - Abington

Katie Alexander

Defense and hustle are the hallmarks of this junior's game... Abington coach Mike Mayhew builds his team's around defense, and this junior was perhaps the most vital player in that phase of the game this season, generally taking the top scorer man-to-man or playing the strong side on the zone...Also more than held her own on the boards despite her slender 5'5" frame, averaging just under 10 rebounds per game...A South Shore League All-Star, Alexander is also a top soccer player for Abington High...She has already been selected a tri-captain for next year's team... Abington coach Mike Mayhew: "Katie gets the absolute most out of her size and ability by playing with heart. Her contributions aren't the kind that show up on the stat sheet, but any coach would love to have her."

Brianne Henry - Center
Junior - Scituate

Brianne Henry

The six-footer wrapped up an excellent junior campaign averaging 16 points and 12.5 rebounds per game for the inexperienced Lady Sailors (5-14)... Brianne is a tireless worker inside, who often puts back her own misses...Patriot League All-Star...has already drawn college interest, with UNH, Mount Holyoke and Massachusetts College among the suitors...her best performance of the season was a 37 point explosion against Carver... METCO student who lives in Boston...plays basketball year round as a member of the elite AAU program...she will be travelling to New York and Florida with her under 15 team this summer....her late father, Paul Stewart, played Div. 1 NCAA basketball at Cleveland State...may transfer to a prep school next year... Scituate coach Joe Strazdes: "She's the best rebounder I've had in my 30 years of coaching. Basketball is just Brianne's thing. She's totally devoted to it. She's progressed tremendously since her freshman year, and she has her work ethic to thank for that."

Julia Porter – Forward
Senior (Capt.) – Silver Lake

"The heart and soul" of the Lady Lakers this season, according to head coach Dick Steele... averaged 9.8 points and 6.7 rebounds per game, but her contributions went well beyond numbers... renowned for her leadership and work ethic... Though just 5-foot-6, she proved a very tenacious inside player, compensating with hustle and scrappiness for what she lacks in size... named to the Old Colony League All-Star team for the second straight season...ranked second in her senior class... named to the Massachusetts All-Academic basketball team after being named an Academic All-American for soccer this past fall...is still considering her collegiate options...has been accepted to Harvard, Brown and BC...plans to major in environmental or biological science or engineering...Silver Lake coach Dick Steele: "As a coach, I couldn't have asked for a much better player to coach than Julia. She works extremely hard, and she's a great leader and extremely coachable. She's also very intelligent on the floor, just as she obviously is off it."

Cantelmo calls it a day

Osgood principal to resign

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The school department is acting quickly to find a replacement for Osgood Principal Marilee Cantelmo, who is resigning at the end of the school year.

Edward Malvey, superintendent of schools, said the school department has already started to advertise the position that pays in the $70,000 range.

"Ideally we'd like to have someone on board this summer before the start of school."
Edward Malvey

"Ideally we'd like to have someone on board this summer before the start of school," Malvey said.

Malvey said Cantelmo notified him of her plans two weeks ago. And although she hasn't ruled out another principalship, she is exploring a number of options including curriculum and consulting positions, he said.

"She has a lot of talent and is looking to getting into another aspect of the business," Malvey said.

Cantelmo, who has served as principal of the K-3 elementary school for five years, could not be reached for comment.

Malvey said a committee made up of representatives from the school committee, parents, teachers and administrators would screen the semi-finalist candidates.

"I do the prescreening to make sure the applicants match up with the qualifications," said Malvey, who will make the final hiring decision.

Qualifications include a master's degree, and being well versed in curriculum, instruction, teaching strategies and a knowledge of early elementary education.

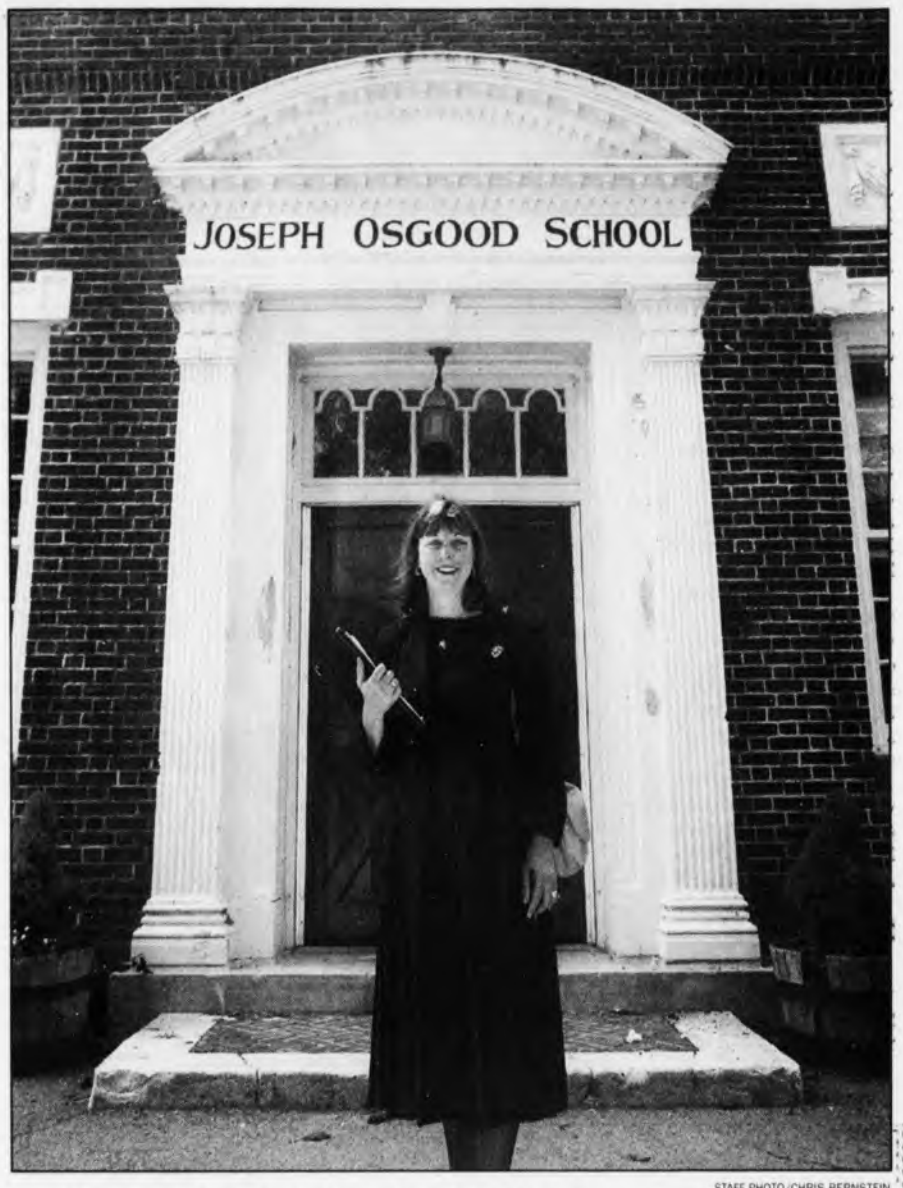
"Some background in administration would also be helpful," Malvey said.

He said Cantelmo hired more than 50 staff members including aides, secretaries and teachers during her tenure in Cohasset. She also did a nice job bringing in money through grants for a number of programs, including those for the gifted and talented, Malvey said.

He praised Cantelmo for the way she handled the move from the old to new Osgood schools nearly three years ago.

"I was a time-consuming activity to deal with all the logistics involving staff, students in coordinating the closing down of one school and the getting another up and running."

In a September 1998 interview in Max magazine, a supplement to the Cohasset Mariner,



"I do the prescreening to make sure the applicants match up with the qualifications."
Edward Malvey

Cantelmo talked about the move.

"It's such a big task to move a house — imagine moving a 70-year-old school!" she said with a laugh.

Cantelmo also described the challenges a principal faces.

"The amount of paperwork is tenfold what it was a decade ago," she said. "That's the downside of the job. A 55- to 60-hour work week is average for principals today."

College tips

The Hingham Recreation Center is partnering with a college advisory company to provide a free workshop for local high school students and their parents on how to successfully get into the best possible college.

An admissions expert from College Coach will lead a workshop called Beating the Admissions Game at 7 p.m., Wednesday, April 11, at the Hingham Recreation Center.

The workshop will provide students and their parents with tips and information covering such issues as how to market yourself, selecting the most appropriate college, applying for financial aid and writing the killer essay.

"Successfully plowing through the competitive and complicated college admissions process can be an ordeal for even the most talented student," said Lloyd Peterson, director of education at College Coach and a former senior admissions official at Yale University.

"Understanding how the system works can give a student a leg up in getting into college." Call 741-1464 for more information.

'Summer Arts at Derby 2001'

Registration is now open for "Summer Arts at Derby 2001" at Derby Academy in Hingham. Summer Arts is a comprehensive five-week arts program for ages 8 to 15. The program is staffed by professional artist/teachers and includes more than 90 courses in drama, visual arts, newspaper and creative writing, dance, sports, gymnastics, photography, music, animation, and martial arts. A newspaper is printed every day and a full-scale musical is produced. Students choose their own schedules and there is a daily free-choice period to try new things. The program culminates in an all-day arts festival that celebrates the talents of the students through performances and exhibits of their work.

The goal of the program is to allow students to explore a wide range of activities and to encourage their individual talents. Campers from more than 20 communities share a special summer through the arts.

The dates of the program are June 25 to July 27; hours are 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday. Tuition for the five-week program is $1,500; enrollment is limited. For applications and more information, call Thalia McMillion, director, at (781) 740-4766.

Youth arrested on drug charge

After a routine traffic stop last Friday evening, police arrested Sean R. Brith, 18, of Bradford Avenue in Scituate and charged him with illegal possession of marijuana.

Police said Brith was traveling 49 m.p.h. in a 30 m.p.h. zone. After the traffic stop, police smelled burnt marijuana and said Brith admitted to having smoked it. Police found a partially smoked marijuana cigarette in the ashtray and an additional small amount on his person. He was arraigned on the charge Monday in Quincy District Court.

Anti-landfill group proposes 'SAFE environmental agenda'

The following press release was provided by Stop Any Further Expansion, a group of local environmental activists:

At the March31Town Meeting, Stop Any Further Expansion will ask Cohasset voters to support the "SAFE Environmental Agenda" of eight warrant Articles designed to protect Cohasset's environment and public health.

"The SAFE Environmental Agenda will help protect the right of Cohasset residents to clean air and water," said SAFE member John McNabb. "These articles will help prevent any further expansion of the Cohasset Heights Landfill and will also deal with other potential threats to our environment and public health."

THE SAFE ENVIRONMENTAL AGENDA:

ARTICLE 13. ACQUIRE WOLF PIT. This Water Commission Article will allow the Water Commission to acquire the "Wolf Pit" property located at the end of Beechwood Street near Doane Street. Preventing development of that property, which drains into Bound Brook and then into Lily Pond, will help to protect the water supply from potential contamination which could result from the discharge of septic systems and storm water runoff from development so close to the water supply.

ARTICLE 15. AMEND HAZARDOUS MATERIALS BYLAW. This Water Commission Article will amend the Hazardous Materials Bylaw, adopted in 1986, to update the Bylaw to conform to the current recommendations of the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection. This update of the Haz. Materials Bylaw, which helps protect town water supplies from the hazardous materials, is required by DEP before the Water Commission can reactivate the Ellms Meadow and Sohier Street Wellfields (planned to be reactivated by next Summer).

ARTICLE 16. AMEND WATER RESOURCE DISTRICT BYLAW. This Water Commission article will amend the Water Resources District Bylaw, adopted in 1986, to conform to current recommendations of the DEP and the Water Commission's engineering consultants. This update of the Water Resources District Bylaw, which helps protect town water supplies by restricting adverse land uses in the Water Resource District, is required by DEP before the Water Commission reactivates the Ellms Meadow and Sohier Street Wellfields (planned to be completed by next Summer). This article also includes a revision of the Water Resource District boundaries to include the larger wellhead protection area for the Ellms Meadow Wellfield which was recently identified by Geosphere, an engineering firm hired for DEP to conduct these Zone II analysis for all wellfields across Massachusetts.

ARTICLE 28. BAN SALE OF MERCURY THERMOMETERS IN COHASSET. This citizen's article would prohibit the sale of mercury thermometers in Cohasset, except by prescription, by January 1, 2002. Mercury in thermometers, when disposed in a trash incinerator, is emitted into the air and then contaminates the fish we eat with unsafe amounts of mercury.

ARTICLE 29. REQUIRE ZONING APPROVAL BEFORE LANDFILL SITE ASSIGNMENT. This SAFE article would require an applicant for a Site Assignment for a solid waste facility to first provide to the Board of Health documentation from the Building Inspector or ZBA that the proposed facility complies with Zoning Bylaws, so the Town can avoid the time and expense of a Site Assignment hearing for a facility not allowed under zoning, such as the Cohasset Heights landfill.

ARTICLE 30. PROHIBIT USE VARIANCE FOR SOLID WASTE FACILITIES. This SAFE article would prohibit a use variance for a privately-owned solid waste facility in the Water Resource District or in any other Zoning District, except the Light Industrial District, where solid waste uses are allowed under state law.

ARTICLE 31. REGULATE LANDFILL GAS. This SAFE Article would give the Board of Health authority to protect the residents of Cohasset from the potential public health threat from landfill gas from CHL and the Town landfill. Landfill gas contains many hazardous air pollutants which may threaten public health, according to the EPA and DEP.

ARTICLE 32. GROUNDWATER CLEANUP. This SAFE Article, based on an existing Bylaw in Acton, Mass., would require that any hazardous waste site in the Water Resource District (there are some) meet cleanup standards stricter than the federal or state government, to ensure that our public drinking water, which we drink, is as clean as possible.

Hooked on acrylics

Cohasset artist lands her own show

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

She is a woman obsessed —obsessed with painting.

Judy St. Peter is passionate about her art work and it shows. She is currently being featured in her own exhibit at the Paul Pratt Library in Cohasset running through April 25.

"When I was born, I started painting," St. Peter quipped. "I'm very eccentric when it comes to art. I sleep it. I eat it. I think it. I look at paintings as puzzles and I try to solve them."

St. Peter, a Cohasset resident, said the exhibit at the Pratt Library is her first "one-woman show," even though she has shown her work at other area exhibits. The South Shore Art Center member has 32 of her paintings, all of them done in acrylics on display and for sale. St. Peter said many of the works are landscapes, while others depict wildlife.

"I particularly love elephants," St. Peter said, noting some people in her life have even referred to her as the "elephant lady."

"I'm really just an animal nut," she added. "I own two dogs, two cats, two chinchillas, and a lizard."

St. Peter said she used to dabble in other mediums, particularly watercolor, but since she first tried acrylics, she has been hooked.

"I like the thickness of acrylics," she said. "When I first switch to acrylics from watercolor about three or four years ago, I knew they were my medium. To me, acrylics are also much more forgiving than watercolors."

St. Peter said she has always been serious about art, but she has not always had the time to keep herself involved in it. She said she began dedicating herself to her art about 10 years ago when she was home taking care of her small children.

St. Peter graduated from high school in 1974, and then went on to the Art Institute in Boston where she got her first tastes of serious painting.

When she left the Art Institute in 1977, St. Peter began working as a graphic designer. Her emphasis at that time was less on painting, and more on her day job. But eventually, that changed. In the early 1990s, she started reviving her artistic self.

"When I was born, I started painting."
-Cohasset artist Judy St. Peter

"I'm glad I got back into it," St. Peter said. "I didn't know at that time how important it would end up being to me. These days, painting is almost like a spiritual thing for me. I can't really explain it."

St. Peter said one of the unique aspects of her work is that she frames . All of them, and sometimes even paints around a given frame. "Frames can motivate me," she said. "I also feel that frames can make or break your paintings."

St. Peter describes her work as "interpretive." She said her methods include changing colors a lot, and staying away from "direct representations." She enjoys using her imagination, and putting her own stamp on the scenes of life she creates.

"I like paintings that are not labored," she said. "The loose ones are the ones I enjoy the most. I think one of the most satisfying things for me is solving the problems within paintings. If I'm struggling with something, and I can come up with the solution, it's one of the most gratifying things to me."

St. Peter said she is influenced by a number of artists. One local artist St. Peter said she admires is painter Rosalind Farbush.

"She's influenced me as much as anybody in terms of style, color, and palate," St. Peter said of Farbush. "Last summer, I spent some time painting outdoors with her."

Painting outside is only one of the ways St. Peter gets her ideas. She Also paints from books and from her own mind. "There's tons of scenery around here," she said. "Some of the best paintings are right outside your window. And for me, one painting just leads to the next. I always get new ideas while I'm working on a given painting, and there's a lot of times where I work on more than one at the same time."

St. Peter also has her own opinion on what constitutes a good piece of art work.

"A good painting needs to have a sense of organization, a good composition, and a balance in terms of style and color," she said. "There has to be a pulse, a feeling that emits through the painting."

St. Peter is enjoying her one-woman show, but notes she has another, showcasing her wildlife work, running from May 31-July 2 at Norwell's South Shore Natural Science Center.

For more information on St. Peter's current or upcoming shows, call her At (781) 383-1944. The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is located at 106 South Main St., Cohasset.

Bustin bids farewell to South Shore Art Center

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

After four years at the helm, South Shore Art Center Executive Director Dillon Bustin is saying goodbye. Bustin's decision was announced during a recent art exhibition at the Cohasset-art center.

Program director Sarah Hannan will now serve as acting executive director until a permanent replacement can be found.

Bustin said he is leaving to take a job as the director for the Emerson Umbrella Center for the Arts in Concord. "I've enjoyed working with the broad age range at the art center," Bustin said, noting people of all ages take classes and show their work there.

"My memories are a torrent of vivid images: engaged and productive students the rapt and attentive faces of audience members in the galleries; strolling throngs of people enjoying the festival; the jovial crowds at opening receptions."

Bustin said although he thoroughly enjoyed his time at the South Shore Art Center, he is excited about many aspects of his new job.

"There are few places I would consider switching to," Bustin said, "but the town of Concord has a legacy in several areas I'm interested in. It used to be the intellectual capitol of the United States."

South Shore Art Center Executive Director Dillon Bustin

Bustin said there are so many positive things that have come out of Concord including certain methods of teaching, nature study, facets of environmentalism, human rights causes, religious freedom and multiculturalism. He said legendary writers have spent their shares of time in Concord, includingNathaniel Hawthorne, Louisa May Alcott, Henry David Thoreau and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

"The Emerson Umbrella is involved in many of these areas," Bustin said.

"The center puts an emphasis on visual arts, but there is also an emphasis on creative writing, theater, and dance.

Although he is moving on, Bustin said he will be able to keep in touch with the many people he has met over the years at the South Shore Art Center.

"I'll still remain as a member," he said. "I want to stay involved here on some level."

Golden rule rules for Braintree teen

This continues our on-going campaign to recognize local teens who give back to their communities. Watch for a new Spirit of Community feature each month in Living. We welcome your nominations. Please see our ballot inside.

Spirit of Community

Stephanie McHugh is cheer leader, peer leader and much more

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Stephanie McHugh knows the meaning of hard work, but she is also very Aware of what it takes to be involved with her community.

McHugh, 17, of Braintree, is a senior at Blue Hills Regional Technical School in Canton. While school activities keep her busy, she still finds time to help other people around her.

"With her enthusiasm, spirit, and attitude, (McHugh) is going to do really well in life," said Deborah Lowrance, head of the guidance department at Blue Hills Regional. "She's a people person, and just an all-around terrific kid."

McHugh now serves as honorary junior president of an area organization called the American Legion Auxiliary, an organization made up of war veteran's wives and also women who served in the military.

"My grandmother signed me up as a member the day I was born," McHugh said.

She said for her, being a member of the organization calls for certain responsibilities.

"There's not many 17-year-old girls who would go out and do all these things to help people. She's a different kind of girl."
Kathy Radley,
Stephanie McHugh's aunt

"We go to hospitals and visit veterans," McHugh said, noting her most frequent stop is at the VA hospital in West Roxbury. "We do all kinds of fundraisers to try to raise money for them as well."

McHugh explained she marches in veteran's parades, and often initiates "can drives" for veterans at local supermarkets. McHugh credits one of her personal heroes, Princess Diana, as inspiring her own outreach work.

And helping support veterans isn't the only thing on McHugh's busy agenda. She's proud of the work she has done coaching Braintree's South Middle School cheerleading squad, something she did last year, and the year before that.

"This is the first year I haven't done that," McHugh said. "I've been pretty busy with getting ready for college."

She's also active at her school. This year, McHugh was captain of the varsity football cheerleading team for her school, as well as being captain of the varsity hockey cheerleading team. She also currently serves as vice president of the school's senior student council, is a member of the yearbook committee, and also serves as a "peer helper."

"The peer helpers are a group that helps assist us at certain school-based events," Lowrance said, noting McHugh has helped show people around the school during open houses and job fairs. Lowrance noted that McHugh has been a peer helper since her freshman year.

And McHugh's good works have not gone unrecognized.

"I've always been taught to help others and to treat people how I'd want to be treated."
Stephanie McHugh

She has received a number of awards over the years from her school, including recognition for having perfect attendance (freshman and sophomore years), an award for being a peer helper, and four varsity letters.

Despite her hectic schedule, McHugh still manages to hold down a job as a waitress/hostess at Jimbo's South in Braintree, where she has worked for the past four years.

When she is not doing community service, working, or taking part in school-based functions, McHugh is dancing, shopping, spending time with friends, or reading books. She also enjoys being with children, so she dedicates a good deal of her time to babysitting certain family members and neighbors.

"She talks to people," said McHugh's mother, Kim Hinthorne, "not down to them. She's proof that there are some amazing kids out there who do a lot of good. Not all of them are bad apples. She's always been very outgoing."

Kathy Radley, McHugh's aunt, also had good things to say about her niece.

She's not into where the party is, she's just really dedicated to everything she does and all the people she helps."

And McHugh has a lot to look forward to as her high school days wind down.

She was recently accepted to Johnson and Wales' campus in South Carolina where she wants to prepare for a career in sports management. But she also want to continue doing some sort of community service.

"I've always been taught to help others," McHugh said, "and to treat people how I'd want to be treated. Helping people out is just something I've been doing since I was little."

The best grilled cheese sandwich

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The perfect grilled cheese sandwich may not be the culinary equivalent of the ultimate blanquette de veau or the consummate Beef Wellington, but, next to pasta with butter and cheese, it may be America's favorite homemade fast food. Although simple in construct, the bread is often scorched, the cheese is either rubbery or half-melted, and the sandwich sticks to the pan. I was seeking an evenly browned sandwich with sturdy, but not tough, bread and cheese that is perfectly melted, tender, and full of flavor.

My first discovery was that low heat was the only way to go. The bread does not burn, it turns out crispy, and the cheese has time to melt properly. The next issue was the butter. Many recipes suggest adding the butter to the pan but this often results in disaster since the butter is apt to burn. It is best to butter the bread, not the pan. I preferred using 2 teaspoons of softened butter per sandwich although, if you do not have soft butter on hand, you can also melt one tablespoon of butter and brush it on. (I found that you need more butter if using the melted variety since it is harder to brush evenly over the bread. This will produce a slightly greasier sandwich) I also discovered that salted butter was better than unsalted since it adds flavor.

The bread itself is important. I am no fan of thick, sourdough slices for such a delicate purpose. I prefer a firm white bakery-style sandwich loaf. If you only have supermarket breads available, choose Pepperidge Farm Toasting White or Pepperidge Farm Original White. I also tried brioche, wheat, and multigrain breads with little success. This is one recipe where simplicity is a virtue.

The next issue was choosing and preparing the cheese. I tried cheddar, gruyere, Swiss, fontina, muenster, mozzarella and American. Gruyere was the winner since it melted smoothly and had good flavor without being overly sharp. Second best was the standby favorite, American cheese, which was creamy and flavorful. (Be sure to purchase the real thing, not those horrible individually packaged slices. American is the cheese of choice for kids; stick to the gruyere for adults.) Cheddar has good flavor but the texture was a bit grainy and therefore unpleasant, Swiss cheese was rubbery, fontina was lackluster in the flavor department, and muenster and mozzarella were also rubbery, much like Silly Putty.

I suspected that grating the cheese was going to be the best preparation method and, in fact, it was. It is very difficult to slice cheese evenly and thinly and slices need to be trimmed so that they do not extend beyond the bread. (It will stick to the pan.) A half cup of cheese (or about 1 1/2 ounces) per sandwich grated on the large holes of a box grater is optimal.

In terms of additional ingredients, a thin slice of ham or a slice of ripe, flavorful tomato both work well. A thin coating of mustard on one slice of bread is terrific, too.

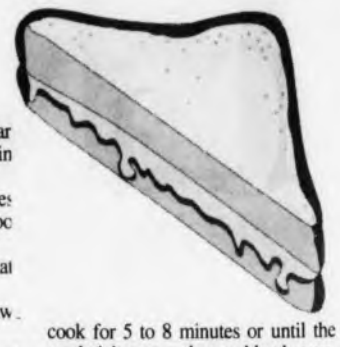
THE BEST GRILLED CHEESE

Softened salted butter is best for this recipe as is grated gruyere. (If you do not have softened butter on hand, use 2 tablespoons melted salted butter for two sandwiches.) A firm bakery-style white sandwich loaf is superior to the Pepperidge Farm breads. You can increase this recipe if you have a skillet large enough to hold more than two sandwiches.

4 slices sturdy white bread (about 1/2 inch thick) either a bakery-style sandwich loaf or a supermarket variety such as Pepperidge Farm Toastin White or Original White

1 cup Gruyere or American chees grated on the large holes of a bo grater, about 3 ounces

2 thin slices of ham or ripe tomat (optional)



Dijon mustard to thinly coat tw slices of bread (optional)

4 teaspoons salted butter at room temperature

Heat a large heavy skillet over low heat. Meanwhile, evenly distribute the grated cheese onto two slices of bread being careful to avoid cheese from hanging over the sides. Top with the optional ham or tomato. Top with the remaining slices of bread either with or without the optional mustard. Press gently to compress the cheese.

Evenly spread one teaspoon of softened salted butter on each of the sandwich tops.

Flip the sandwiches over and repeat cook for 5 to 8 minutes or until the sandwiches are a deep golden brown. Flip sandwiches and cook for an additional 5 to 8 minutes to brown second side. Remove and serve immediately.

Serves 2

Correction from Christopher Kimball: "In my recent recipe for Tomato Soup, peel the roasted red pepper strips and then chop them before adding to the soup. For a smoother soup, you may wish to purée some or all of the tomato pieces before serving."

THURSDAY, MARCH 29

Planetary action rates high today. Take advantage of favorable influences and plan to get new projects off the ground. The moon enters Gemini at 4:01 a.m., setting a quick pace. It is best to launch important enterprises before 5:05 p.m., when the moon aligns with Jupiter. The evening is prime for fun and games. The sun and Venus conjoin, highlighting all social activities, romantic rendezvous.

FRIDAY, MARCH 30

Planetary influences turn around completely, making this a day to slow down. Move cautiously in business or romance. The Gemini moon opposes Pluto this morning, and in the afternoon the moon forms stressful contacts to Mercury and Mars. At 9:54 p.m. the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. Renew your spirit through time spent in solitude, meditation, art or nature.

SATURDAY, MARCH 31

Gear up for a hectic morning. Stay calm no matter what is happening around you. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Mars may spark arguments, accidents. Fortunately, this influence passes over by midday, and the afternoon and evening rate high for resting and re-energizing. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 9:23 a.m. and aligns with Venus at 11:45 p.m. Venus and Neptune form a 60-degree contact at 8:30 p.m, setting the stage for a romantic evening.

SUNDAY, APRIL 1, 2001

Take advantage of mild astrological weather this month and plan to get a lot accomplished. Today the first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 6:49 a.m. A full moon is building up and will culminate Saturday, April 7. The moon travels in Cancer and a harmonious alignment of Venus and Jupiter occurs. This is a wonderful day for a family get-together. Spend quality time with loved ones.

MONDAY, APRIL 2

This day rates high across the board. You can initiate new activities before 10:26 a.m. or after 1:54 p.m. The Cancer moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn at 10:26 a.m., when it becomes inactive. A fiery Leo moon takes over at 1:54 p.m., generating a playful mood. Lunar alignments to Venus, Jupiter and Neptune make this evening prime for social and romantic activities.

TUESDAY, APRIL 3

A Leo moon all day continues to set a quick pace and upbeat mood. The green light is on for new starts in your business or personal life. Sign important contracts, make major decisions, launch ventures. Harmonious lunar alignments to the sun and Pluto hold high potential for productivity. Balance work with play, however. Be sure to take extra time out for favorite friends, hobbies.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 4

Potentially stressful alignments of the moon to Uranus and Saturn can make for a difficult morning. Stay upbeat and go with the flow. At 12:46 p.m. the Leo moon becomes inactive. Planetary influences turn around completely at 3:46 p.m., when the moon enters Virgo. At this time the green light goes on for signing important documents, starting new enterprises. The sun and Pluto align at 6:03 p.m. In addition, applying alignments of Mercury/Saturn and Jupiter/Neptune are in effect. All communications are highlighted; send letters, packages, e-mails.

Spring cleaning your garden

Green thumbs up

Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Signs of spring are beginning to appear everywhere you go as several mild, sunny days helped to soothe the memories of our recent deluges which flooded homes and waterlogged our landscapes. Outside my back door, clusters of satiny white crocus blossoms glisten in the warm afternoon sunshine. Nearby, the dainty nodding blooms of snowdrops dance in the gentle breeze and throughout the garden, bulbs and perennials are coming to life now that the spring season has officially arrived.

A sure sign of spring for this avid birder is the molting of the goldfinches. Their cheerful songs fill the morning air as they perch at my feeders revealing patches of vibrant yellow feathers amidst their drab, gray-green, winter plumage. The males are becoming more recognizable as they don their jet black caps although they are rather an unsightly lot with their current, blotchy appearance.

Each March, my spring fever is ignited at the Massachusetts Horticultural Society's New England Spring Flower Show as the welcome sights, sounds and smells of spring flourish in the glorious landscapes and floral displays to the delight of thousands of visitors each year. The exhibition of magnificent flowering trees and shrubs, elegant delphiniums, cheerful daffodils, tulips and crocuses, colorful primroses, spectacular annuals and perennials in containers, floral designs and gardens, and the peaceful sights and sounds of water in the garden combine to create an overwhelming sense that springtime is imminent. Fortunately, Mother Nature did not disappoint and the weekend weather offered an opportunity to search for signs of spring in our own backyards.

Spring cleaning the yard and gardens is always a first priority and despite large patches of crusty snow cover in the shadier areas of my property and expansive puddles in others, several gardens were exposed and relatively dry, allowing for the lengthy cleanup process to begin. Although it is best to avoid treading on soggy soils as this often leads to compaction which eliminates the air in the soil essential for healthy root systems, the removal of leaves, branches and debris from lawns and gardens should be undertaken as soon as time and conditions permit. The distinctive scents of bronze fennel, lavender and catnip drifted through the air as the herb garden was clipped and raked and looked quite tidy by day's end.

Spring pruning of trees and shrubs ranks high on my to-do list and a pruning shears, hedge shears and folding pruning saw are always nearby once my cleanup gets underway. Clippings from forsythia, dogwoods and crabapples will be brought indoors to force into bloom for an early glimpse of springtime splendor. Clumps of ornamental grasses should be sheared to a few inches from the ground early in the season to minimize damage to new growth as it emerges.

As the end of March approaches, winter mulches can be eased away from the crowns of plants to allow light and air to reach emerging leaves but these protective covers are best left in place over root systems for another week or two to minimize the erects of our alternating freeze-thaw cycles, typical of early spring weather.

It is never too early to begin the never-ending chore of pulling weeds. Experienced gardeners may be able to identify numerous varieties but even a novice should be able to recognize dandelions which are easier to extricate at this time of year while surrounding plants are just beginning to appear and the soil is loose and workable. As the season progresses, weed removal becomes more challenging as perennials grow and expand often hiding dandelions and their allies which soon flower and start spreading seeds and offspring all over the garden. The secret to a reasonably weed-free garden is to weed early and often before seeds are produced and then to spread a thin layer of mulch to reduce further germination.

Trees, shrubs and perennials will benefit from an application of fertilizer early in the season. Broadcast an organic fertilizer such as MNLA Plant-O-Ganic (8-8-8) or Espoma Plant-tone (5-3-3) around woody plants and over perennial borders or carefully distribute granular fertilizers in bands around the base of perennials and at the drip line of trees and shrubs. Lime can be applied to lawns and gardens once the ground thaws and the soil dries out.

Join the members of the Hanover and Walnut Hill Garden Clubs of Hanover for an evening lecture by garden writer and lecturer extraordinaire, Sydney Eddison of Newtown, Conn. Sydney is the author of several gardening books including "The Self-Taught Gardener" and a regular contributor to Fine Gardening magazine. Her topic, "A Perennial Border for All Seasons", will be presented at the Cushing Hall, Norwell Center, on April 10 at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $5 and will benefit the clubs' beautification projects.

Two races top ballot

Candidates confident as big day approaches

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

In less than 48 hours Cohasset residents will head to the polls and help decide the path the town will take.

The Community Preservation Act, a $300,000 Proposition 2 1/2 override, a five-year seat on the Planning Board and two three-year seats on the School Committee are on the ballot. All should play a major role in the town for the next few years.

Polls open at 8 a.m. Saturday morning at Cohasset Town Hall, and will close at 6 p.m.

Despite the seemingly important ballot items, Town Clerk Marion Douglas is skeptical that the election will draw a big turnout. "We haven't had many absentee ballots turned in," Douglas said. "It seems kind of strange [considering what's on the ballot] but absentee ballots are usually our indication.

"Hopefully, I'm wrong."

Out of the 16 town seats up for grabs, only three are embattled in races; a seat on the planning board, and two seats on the school committee.

The five candidates for those three seats all say they have enjoyed campaigning this spring, and are fairly confident going into Saturday.

Polls are open from 8 a.m.-6p.m. at Town Hall.

"This is the first time ever doing any politicking, and I think it's gone great," said Planning Board candidate Richard Brown of Church Street. "I've had a lot of support, had a lot of people behind me."

His opponent, Ripley Road resident Peter Pratt, says he too has Cohasset resident Roy Fitzsimmons tells the runners to line up for the start of Sunday's 25th Annual Road Race By-the-Sea 10K. Temperatures hovering in the 40s and the stiff breeze the field of more than 600 runners faced, made for plenty of winter hats, gloves, turtlenecks and sweat pants at the starting line near Cohasset Common. $300K override passes muster at Town Meeting

Tax hike question is on Saturday's ballot

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

By approving the town's operating budget at the annual Town Meeting — Cohasset citizens set the stage for a vote on a $300,000 override question at the polls Saturday.

The override is needed to balance the fiscal year 2002 budget, which found itself on the short side, thanks to an 18 percent increase in health insurance costs for town employees, and unexpected increases in legal expenses and police overtime this year.

"There was a significant challenge to balance the budget," Town Manager Mark Haddad told Town Meeting Saturday. Haddad said he hoped going into the budget process the town would be able to escape the year without needing to override Proposition 2 fi..

But in January, Haddad discovered the town faced a $200,000 increase in insurance costs. He said the town had expected to use $100,000 of free cash – or unencumbered funds — to offset any shortfalls in this year's budget. However that money disappeared through an increase in police overtime due to three injured officers, and an increase in legal expenses accumulated fighting Mass-American Water Company's proposed 16 percent rate increase. Mass-American provides water service to North Cohasset.

Selectmen chairman Thomas Callahan called the override "conservative" and necessary to maintain the same level of services.

Dick Avery, chairman of the town Advisory Committee, which was in favor of the budget, said Cohasset is a town that is "incompatible" with the restrictions set under Proposition 2 fi.

Under Proposition 2 fi, a state law, a town can not increase its tax levy by more than 2 fi percent in a year without an override. Passing an override is a two-step process and

Finneran pays Murray a visit

Attends Citizen of Year reception at Kimball's

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@ CNC.COM

Only Mary Jeanette Murray — the long-time Republican state representative of Cohasset — would ask for the state's top-ranking Democrat to attend a ceremony in her honor. So Speaker of the House Thomas Finneran obliged and was on hand Sunday to honor Murray as the Cohasset Mariner Citizen of the Year at a reception at Kimball's By the Sea.

"She is in the Hall of Fame of legislators."
— Speaker Tom Finneran

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, state Rep. Garrett Bradley, Selectmen Thomas Callahan, Merle Brown and Fred Koed, Police Chief Brian Noonan and Town Manager Mark Haddad also turned out, along with her family and friends in a community, which she served for more than 30 years.

"I never thought of myself as being an outstanding person, I really didn't," Murray told the hometown crowd. "I think the only reason God put me on earth was to help people."

Land act is up for vote

Would add surcharge to property taxes

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Town voters have a chance on Saturday to create a trust fund that can be used to preserve Cohasset's open space and historical buildings, and be eligible to receive state matching grants.

The Community Preservation Act — a hot issue on many of the South Shore's town ballots — would add a 1.5 percent surcharge to a Cohasset homeowner's tax bill, and could be used to purchase new park land, do capital improvements to historic properties, and help develop community housing.

"Without being too sappy, for those of us who love Cohasset, this is an opportunity to preserve what we love."
—Ronnie McMorris, selectman

Whatever the town raises through the surcharge could be matched by the state, using money in the Massachusetts Community Preservation Fund, which is collected from state-wide surcharges on recording fees.

Funds raised would be overseen by a town community preservation committee made up by a representative from the open space committee, conservation commission, recreation department, historical commission and housing authority, as well as up to four citizens-at-large. When money is spent, it must be broken up so 10 percent is spent on open space, 10 percent on historic preservation, and 10 percent on community housing. The remaining 70 percent can be spent in whatever percentage the commission chooses. All spending must be approved by a Town Meeting vote.

The town is able to levy a surcharge between 1/4 of a percent and 3 percent. A group of Cohasset citizens got together and petitioned to have a 1.5 percent surcharge placed on the ballot. If the surcharge passes, the town would raise approximately $200,000 annually for its fund. Town Manager Mark Haddad said it would add 15 cents to the town tax rate, and cost the owner of a home assessed at $400,000 approximately $70 a year extra. The first $100,000 of a property's value will be excluded from the surcharge.

Town Meeting says no to Cohasset Plaza expansion

But yes to most everything else

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

One of the few to leave Cohasset's Annual Town Meeting disappointed was Donald Staszko, who — for the second time in two years — saw his attempt to build a new 30,000 square foot building at Cohasset Plaza fail, this time by five votes.

"If it failed by one vote, it's one vote, but it tells you that a vast majority of the citizens were in favor of it," said Staszko, a Cohasset resident, who thanked the number of citizens who stood up and defended his article.

Out of 265 Cohasset residents that initially filed into the Sullivan Gymnasium, 170 voted in favor of Staszko's citizen's petition, that would have extended the highway business zoning district 200 feet to the rear of Cohasset Plaza. Unfortunately for Staszko, he needed 175 votes to meet the two-thirds requirement needed for a zoning change.

Arguments focused on whether the town should refuse to change the zoning, or approve it and add $87,000 a year to the tax base.

The only other articles on the 32-item warrant defeated was the citizen's petition concerning the signature requirement (see related story), and an article that would have added a new bylaw about landfill emissions. An article allowing accessory dwellings was indefinitely postponed (see related story). Approximately $1.2 million in spending was authorized at Town Meeting, outside of the town's $25 million operating budget, which also passed.

The Town Meeting was called to order at 10:13 a.m. and adjourned shortly before 6:30 p.m. Though the meeting started strong, the numbers drifted off as time wore on. One quorum call at 5 p.m. counted 102 residents. Another quorum call with two articles left on the agenda was withdrawn. Town meeting can continue without a quorum of 100 as long as it's not challenged.

The see-saw debate over rezoning part of the Route 3A property, which Staszko purchased in 1983, lasted nearly an hour. Arguments focused on whether the town should refuse to change the zoning, or approve it and add $87,000 a year to the tax base. A total of 14 people, not including town officials, spoke from the audience on the issue.

The Board of Selectmen, Advisory Committee, Capital Budget Committee and Board of Assessors each recommended the article. However, the Planning Board voted 3-0 not to support the change. (Board members Al Moore and Chris Ford were not at the planning board meeting when the vote was taken).

"If zoning laws are subject to change by a citizen's petition, there is no real sign of what would happen," said 15-year planning board member Robert Sturdy. "I don't feel the need to increase the amount of highway business zoning."

He also said whatever happens on Route 3A has an impact on the Cohasset Village merchants, and that the town would have no control over what store went into the new building. Staszko insisted that the new store would be a national retailer, which would have no impact on the downtown area.

Ash Street resident Gail Whitehouse reminded the town that Staszko was not a "struggling businessman" and "the bylaws had a purpose when put in place years ago."

Thomas Gruber of Pratt Court said approval would set a dangerous precedent and inch the commercial district closer to the residential one. "I'd hate to see it encroach closer to my home," he said.

But, speaking for his board, Selectman Michael Sullivan said "we feel the adverse impacts are not significant."

Beach Street resident Lincoln Bloomfield said the planning board should "find a way to encourage business growth along Route 3A, not fight them," and suggested an overall review of the town's zoning strategies.

Staszko built Stop & Shop in 1986, and the other building, which houses Dunkin' Donuts and Blockbuster Video in 1988. The plaza, if expanded, would also allow Stop & Shop to increase by 15,000 square feet. Staszko has already completed a land swap with Jane Cook, the only abutter to the property besides the town. He also owns the site of the former Chevrolet dealership farther south on Route 3A.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the additional revenue to the town could take six cents off the tax rate.

But the that argument wasn't able to sway an additional five people.

Afterwards, Staszko said he would be back in two years, and again try to rezone the property.

Staszko said although he was disappointed in the defeat, he was more disappointed in what the town won't get. "I'm more disappointed not giving tax relief to senior citizens and people on fixed incomes," he said. "In the 35 years I've been in Cohasset, the economic social structure has changed drastically... We're forcing people out of the community because taxes are so high, because there is such a limited commercial tax base."

Woodside Cemetery

Fifteen years after the town started looking for a new site, Cohasset residents approved $700,000 to expand Woodside Cemetery and ease the burial space crunch in town. There are currently no spaces left in Woodside, and sales have been slow at Beechwood, according to Cemetery Committee member Glenn Pratt. The expansion will give space for 814 full-casket burials and 1,000 cremation urns, and create a memorial to Cohasset's Gold Star mothers.

Pratt said the money will be paid back by plot sales. Normally, the town has have five years to pay the money back, but state Rep. Garrett Bradley has filed a bill on behalf of the town that would allow the town to pay it back over 10 years. So far, the bill does not have any opposition in the Legislature, according to Bradley.

Once the debt service is paid off, the town stands to collect upwards of $2 million in its perpetual care fund.

The article had the full support of Selectmen and the Advisory Committee. Capital Budget Committee Chairman Mark Brown said his board backed the plan because, "unless people stop dying, the cemetery will pay for itself."

Pratt had originally planned to spend just $600,000 but bids, which were opened last week, came in higher than expected.

The article was adopted unanimously, and with applause from the Town Meeting body.

Hagerty Property

Town Meeting also approved $80,000 for construction of the new town parking lot on the Hagerty property at the end of Parker Avenue. October's special Town Meeting had given the town $175,000 to remove the concrete slab from the former Cohasset Colonial Furniture site, re-grade the parking lot, and construct a pier and dock, a wooden walk-way from the site to Government Island, and new sea wall.

However, when bids were opened in January, the lowest bid was $225,000. Rather than knock off some of the project's details, such as the new pier, Hagerty Committee Chairman Russ Bonetti decided to ask Town Meeting for additional funds.

During discussion of the article, Jerusalem Road resident Lee Jenkins asked why the town's Department of Public Works couldn't be used for parts of the project, in an attempt to save money.

Bonetti said, "We felt it's better to go out and get people who do this for a living, with all the environmental concerns [surrounding the project.]" The permitting process for the project took nearly seven years to complete.

After the meeting, Bonetti said with the money in hand, it is now just a matter of signing a contract and work can begin.

100-signature proposal defeated

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A move to change the number of signatures required to place a citizen's petition on the warrant from 10 to 100 was soundly defeated at Saturday's Town Meeting.

The article – or item of business — was initiated by Jerusalem Road resident Lucia Woods, who said the Town Meeting warrant has become too cluttered with citizen's petitions. She said requiring 100 signatures would force proponents to demonstrate their article wider citizen backing.

"I remember Town Meeting starting at 1 p.m. and we could get through all of the town's business in one day," said Woods. "It's just better government."

The change would have made the number equal with the number of signatures needed for a citizen's petition article at a special town meeting. Woods argued that 10 signatures in a town of 5,000 registered voters which is 2/10 of 1 percent, is inconsequential and that 100 signatures or 2 percent is a better representation.

The change, if it has passed, would have required the approval of the state Legislature.

Unfortunately for Woods, the article didn't have the support of the town elected boards. "We need not create roadblocks," said Advisory Committee member Bill Foley.

Speaking for selectmen, Merle Brown said he wished more people would simply ask the board to propose articles for them, and save citizens petitions for a last resort.

MORE TOWN MEETING NEWS PAGE 9

The article was adamantly opposed by John McNabb, no stranger to citizen's petitions himself. "We shouldn't be trying to make it harder for people, we should be making it more inviting," he said.

McNabb, himself, sponsored five citizen's petitions this year, four of which passed.

He said the 10-signature rule is a tradition – a remnant of colonial democracy that has remained unchanged for the last 300 years. McNabb also pointed out that some major recent Town Meeting decisions – the Town Manager Act in 1998, and last year's zoning change for the landfill – were made possible by citizen's petitions.

North Main Street resident Donald Evans backed Woods' proposal. "I think it makes good sense...A lot has changed since 1715," he said. "And if you can't convince 99 other people, then maybe Town Meeting isn't the place you bring it up."

Leonora Jenkins of Jerusalem Road, and another resident familiar with citizen's petitions, argued against the change, particularly since the deadline to file petitions comes right after the holidays.

Border Street resident Sam Knox said 100 signatures were "too excessive" and 10 signatures were "too low" and made a motion to change the requirement to 20 signatures. After limited debate, the amendment was defeated.

Martha Gjesteby of Old Pasture Road, warned of the potential embarrassment the town would face if the state legislature had to debate amending a state-wide law, just for Cohasset. "I think we ought to just keep it the way it is," she said.

"It worked a long time ago, and it might work a long time from now," argued Agnes McCann of Doane Street.

More than a half-hour of debate ended when Parker Avenue resident Russ Bonetti said he found it ironic the meeting was spending so much time on an article "that was supposed to speed up Town Meeting."

The article was defeated by a sizeable margin.

Government watchdogs

Congratulations to the 265 citizens who took the time to attend at least part of Saturday's Annual Town Meeting. There are some 5,000 registered voters in town — the vast majority of whom decided to sit this one out. While we think it's a shame that more residents don't get involved in the old, venerable form of pure democracy — Town Meeting — that shouldn't diminish the efforts of those who do.

Year after year, we see many of the same faces in the Sullivan gymnasium at the middle-high school. With their town warrants in hand, the stalwart citizens listen to the debate and try to cast educated votes on issues that will affect all of us.

Yes, the chairs are hard. And this year in an effort to plow through the warrant in one session, our Town Moderator George Marlette didn't even allow a lunch break, although we were permitted to bring food into the gym. But we didn't hear too many complaints.

In fact the only complaints we did hear were that the Town Meeting went too fast and that some issues were given short shrift in the interest of time.

It is a delicate balancing act that Mr. Marlette faces each year. Concerns about maintaining a quorum if Town Meeting were to spill over to a second session, loom large when there are just a few articles — or items of business left — none of which might draw a crowd.

To those cynics out there that think Town Meeting is "stacked" and therefore, what is voted is a foregone conclusion, you are mistaken. We never cease to be amazed how opinions can be swayed after hearing article proponents or opponents explain their views. There's a dynamic to Town Meeting that makes it interesting and educational. We thank those who continue to support it and can only hope more of you will in the future.

Proposition 2-1/2

Proposition 2-1/2 continues to get a "bad wrap" from many who correctly state the town cannot live within the limits of the state tax cap that went into effect 20 years ago.

It is fair to say there is no way the town budget can absorb 3 percent salary raises, the rising costs of health insurance, legal bills and so on when it can only raise the tax levy by 2-1/2 percent without an override. But sometimes we forget that overrides are part of what Prop. 2-1/2 is all about. Overrides allow the town to exceed the limits of Prop. 2-1/2 with voter approval. In other words, overrides put the power of increasing real estate taxes in your hands and don't allow municipal government to pass those costs on without your OK.

Saturday, there are two ballot questions that, if approved, will raise your taxes.

One is a general override of $300,000 for the operating budget. It's a permanent tax increase and if it fails, town officials will have to cut the budget approved at Town Meeting.

The second is for the town to adopt the Community Preservation Act, which will add a 1-1/2 percent surcharge on your real estate tax bill for five years with the first $100,000 of valuation exempt. The taxes would be raised outside the limits of Prop. 2-1/2.

Both ballot questions deserve your careful consideration and an educated vote.

Prop.2-1/2 gives you both the power and responsibility to get involved in how your tax money is spent.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

'Yes for CPA'

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset should vote "Yes for CPA." CPA — The Community Preservation Act — is Question 2 on Saturday's ballet. CPA is a five-year program to provide state matching funds to help preserve the character of towns like Cohasset. By voting "yes" now, Cohasset will be in the first wave of towns to approve CPA and will maximize state funding. The state authorization runs out in five years, so to secure Year-1 funding we need to act fast!

Between town and state funds, CPA could raise up to $1.5 million over the five-year period. In accordance with the legislation this would provide $150,000 each for affordable housing, historic preservation, and open space and recreational space acquisition, with the remaining $1.05 million invested in one or all of these purposes. All the expenditures must be approved by town meeting.

Cohasset needs all three — affordable housing, historic preservation, and open space — and CPA is a great way for us to kick-start progress in each area. And its not expensive. Town funds would be raised by a 1.5 percent surcharge on property taxes excluding the first $100,000 of valuation, which amounts to only $66 per year for an average house. Exemptions for veterans, elderly, and the blind would apply.

With its emphasis on affordable housing, historic preservation, and open space acquisition, CPA offers something for just about everyone in Cohasset.

We urge our fellow townspeople to get to the polls and vote Yes on 2 this Saturday!

Budget, taxes

TO THE EDITOR:

a. From Fiscal Year (FY)1999 through FY2004 the actual/projected Cohasset operating budget will increase from$18.3M to $28.511(55.7 percent or 9.3 percent per annum). During that six- year period, the average Cohasset home will see tax bill increase $2,528, or, an average of $421 per year.

b. During retirement 57 percent of Americans rely solely on social security. (I acknowledge that people are encouraged to develop other sources of retirement income, but the majority of Americans are unsuccessful). A generous estimate is that social security increases during the same six year period will be about $1,800, or, $300 per year. The social security check has to cover a lot more than local property tax increases. Also a. Upon completion of the FY2002, 10 percent reevaluation, the Town Manager estimates that assessments will rise 20 to 30 percent although spread unevenly throughout the Cohasset. Property closer to the water or in prime subdivisions may rise more than the average.

b. Even taking into consideration regional variations and surging average selling prices, it is obvious to me that gross inequities exist throughout the Town. For example, two Atlantic Avenue properties recently sold for a combined total of $5.3M while their FY01 combined assessments were $2.2M, a 69 percent difference.

c. The inequitable distribution of assessments and the concomitant tax burden are not confined to ocean front properties, but exists throughout Cohasset. Most likely this occurs because the Assessor's Office is inadequately budgeted to do in-depth, 100 percent evaluations. I do not believe it is because of any intentional favoritism. Undoubtedly, they would have to pay a contractor much more to do a 100 percent inspection of all properties inside and outside, but that is what is needed.

d. I would like to see the Cohasset Mariner publish monthly actual sales prices versus selling year assessments as well as a listing of approve abatements (similar to way the Mariner publishes the police log).

ELECTION GUIDE

SELECTMAN

Tom Callahan

Name: Tom Callahan
Age: 42
Address: 35 Hillside Drive
Family: Wife, Alison; children, Katie (11), Peter (8)
Years in town: 15-1/2

Civic/municipal experience: Board of Selectmen, 3 years; Conservation Commission 9 years. Currently on Growth & Development Committee and serve as representative to South Shore Coalition and Suburban Coalition.
Reason for seeking office: I am running to: a)to see a master plan process through to completion; b) to see that the town continues to participate in both the active regional planning scene and lobbying efforts regarding ed reform funding; c) if the train comes, to hold the T's feet to the fire on whatever is the final agreement we make to insure that abutters are treated fairly.
I also believe that board continues to need a "devil's advocate" on budgetary issues to insure that each dollar spent is justified and that questionable spending items and priorities are scrutinized and openly debated.

Merle S. Brown

Name: Merle S. Brown
Age: 68
Address: 546 Beechwood St.

Reason for seeking office: I have been involved with the Town in one capacity or another for more than 20 years. I have enjoyed working with the people of the town and the many different boards and committees. I am looking forward in continuing this, as a selectman for the next threeyears.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE

Mark DeGiacomo

Name: Mark DeGiacomo
Age: 44
Address: 59 Beach St.

Reason for seeking office: I am running for reelection because I feel that I can make a positive contribution to the schools and the town over the next three years. During my first term on the School Committee we helped pass a $42 million override for the renovations at Deer Hill and the Middle High School, passed budgets which met the needs of the district, established good working relationships with Town Hall, hired a new superintendent and worked with the superintendent on the hiring of a Middle High School principal and Student Services director. Over the next three years, the School Committee will negotiate a new teachers' contract, work with the superintendent on the hiring of a new principal at Osgood, meet the challenges of running two schools during major renovations and work on annual budgets that meet the needs of our children. I believe that with the experience I have gained during my first term I can help the School Committee meet the challenges it will face over the next three years.

Pat Martin

Name: Pat Martin
Age: 41
Address:169 Linden Drive
Family: Husband Dan, sons Danny 10 and Harrison 4, daughter Carly 8

Current Fundraising Chair to the Cohasset High School Golden Anniversary Committee, Member of the South Shore Community Center and Second Congregational Church and Sunday school teacher.
Reason for seeking office: I believe the Cohasset School Committee is currently moving in a very positive direction. We have established great working relationships with the Board of Selectmen, Advisory Committee, PSO and many other organizations in town. As part of a solid team, I have accomplished many things. We received support for the upcoming building renovation project, hired fantastic new administrators and teachers, restored the funding base and moved the schools further ahead on the track of academic excellence. I'd like to use the skills and knowledge base I've acquired after three years to continue moving the district forward. In my second term, I won't require training in the complexities of the School Committee and can immediately keep working. I believe this experience is an important resource to offer and will be most useful as the district confronts the work ahead in the upcoming SPED audit, building renovation project, high school accreditation, teacher re-certification and grade reconfiguration.

Adrienne M. MacCarthy

Name: Adrienne M. MacCarthy
Age: 38

Civic/Municipal Experience: five years on School Facilities/Building Comm.; two years Deer Hill School P.S.O. Rep.; Organizer of the "Friends of the Cohasset Public School Playgrounds," which has installed two playgrounds in two years.
Reason Seeking Office: I feel confident that I can help the School Committee to establish funding priorities, explore full utilization of our schools, and listen and respond to the concerns of our parents. I will make the same commitment to the school committee, that I have made to every other project that I have undertaken. I am prepared to make a full time commitment to the work of the School Committee.

PLANNING BOARD

Richard Brown

Name: Richard Brown
Age: 41
Address: 9 Church St.
Family: Wife, Gina; son, Jason; daughter, Deanna
Years in town: 41
Education: Cohasset High School
Occupation: Owner, Brown's Imports
Civic/municipal experience: President, Cohasset Gridiron Club; Board of Directors, Clark Chatterton Fund
Reason for seeking office: I believe in giving something back to the community. Cohasset has been good to me and my family, and I would like to play a role in the town's future development.
The next five years will see a great deal of change coming our way in the form of the train, commercial development, and continued pressure on real estate prices.
I am a reasonable person, and I will make fair and informed decisions if elected. I would appreciate your vote.

Peter J. Pratt

Name: Peter J. Pratt
Age: 45
Address: 75 Ripley Road
Family: Married to Ms. Donna M. Pratt, with 2 children Ben (7), Jared (5)
Years in town: 35
Education: Cohasset High School Class of '73; BA in Government '79; Bard College, Annandale-on-Hudson, NY; Course work; Graduate School of Management, Boston University
Occupation: Fiber optic telecommunications carrier network developer
Civic/municipal experience: Town of Cohasset; Water Commissioner (1984–1987); City of Somerville; Director, Executive Office of Telecommunications (1984–1990); National League of Cities/National Assoc. of Telecom. Officers, Congressional Spokesman (1989); SAFE citizen organization; founding member (1991-present); Town of Cohasset; Selectman (1994-1997)
Reason for seeking office: I am seeking the open seat on the Planning Board in order to advance an agenda that I see as being critical to the future of Cohasset: 1. The Town must develop a new master plan in order to have our community decision-making about land use guided by a comprehensive approach. 2. The Town must update its zoning bylaws to better protect the natural resources and residential character of Cohasset. 3. Clean and low impact commercial development in designated business zones is necessary for our tax revenue base and the fiscal stability of the Town. 4. The Town needs to assert the public function of land use planning and development control, rather than have developers and specific business interests drive our growth or revitalization future.
This planning agenda for Cohasset is especially critical now, as developmental pressures are made more intense by Title V septic solutions, the central and North Cohasset sewer projects, and the probable arrival of MBTA commuter rail service.

The Red Sox back in 1918

I see by the papers that our Olde Towne Team will be back at Fenway Park this weekend, ready, willing but maybe not able to exorcise the jinx that has kept them from raising a world championship flag for 82 consecutive years.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

And if their usual luck holds up — hi, there, Nomar, Carl and Manny — it will be 83 by October.
Eighty-two years, to coin a phrase, is a long time. Maybe you're not aware of just how long it really is.
The star of the 1918 Red Sox was 23-year-old George Herman "Babe" Ruth, who won 13 games as a pitcher, hit a league-leading 11 home runs as an outfielder and was paid a generous $7,000 salary for the season.
As a member of the winning team in the World Series (they beat the Chicago Cubs, 4 games to 2) he and his teammates each pocketed a cool $1,102.51. The players asked for a minimum of $1,800 but the owners turned them down flat.
Elsewhere in the world in 1918: The heavyweight boxing champ was Jess Willard, all 6-foot-7, 250 pounds of him. The fight with Jack Dempsey that cost him is crown was still a year away and Gene Tunney, the man who beat Dempsey was a U. S. Marine preparing to fight for the championship of the American Expeditionary Force in France.
Paul Robson was an All-American end at Rutgers; Knute Rockne was named the football coach at Notre Dame; the University of Pittsburgh ended Georgia Tech's 32-game undefeated streak. The Tech coach was John Heisman, who would have a trophy named for him 20 years later.
The Toronto Arenas won the Stanley Cup as a member of the newly formed NHL, which started the season with four teams and ended it with three after the Montreal Wanderers' rink burned down. The NFL was still two years away and basketball, well, it was still trying to get rid of the center jump after every basket.
This is what it was like in 1918, the last year the Red Sox won a World Series:
Woodrow Wilson was the president of the United States and Thomas ("What this country needs is a good 5-cent cigar") Marshall was vice president.
Calvin Coolidge was elected governor of Massachusetts; Oliver Wendell Holmes and Louis Brandeis were on the Supreme Court; and the 18th amendment (Prohibition) was not yet ratified.
Ted Williams was born in San Diego and Red Auerbach was a year old in Brooklyn. The Original Celtics were formed in New York City. The Russian Czar Nichols II and his family were executed by the Bolsheviks and Sgt. Alvin York single-handedly captured 132 Germans.
Actress Mary Pickford stunned movie fans by signing a contract to make three films for $250,000 apiece. Elmo Lincoln proved such a success in the original "Tarzan of the Apes," that he was making a sequel, "The Romance of Tarzan." Fatty Arubuckle and Buster Keaton were starring in "The Cook."
Airplanes were only 15 years old but already they were reaching a top speed of 145 miles an hour, rising to 30,000 feet and carrying cargo up to 3,000 pounds. They were used for crop dusting for the first time in the States and the British converted a passenger liner into the world's first aircraft carrier.
The United States adopted daylight saving time. The first air mail route was established between New York, Philadelphia and Washington, carrying letters for 24 cents an ounce.
And the most popular song of the day asked the question: "Would You Rather Be a Colonel with an Eagle on Your Shoulder or a Private with a Chicken on Your Knee?"
All these things were happening in 1918, the last time the Red Sox won the World Series.

Matching grant

TO THE EDITOR:
The "Informational Summary" for Town Meeting Warrant Article 17 did not make clear - in fact did not even mention - that Community Preservation Act monies will come not only from a taxpayer surcharge but also from a State matching grant, a very substantial one. Unfortunately, the wording for Question 2 on our April 7 election Ballot also omits reference to this persuasive factor.
Voters need to know that the approximately $200,000 we will raise through our 1.5 percent tax surcharge will be matched from a dedicated State CPA fund, which is already accumulating at the rate of $25 million a year. In fact, because we are early in the game, if we pass Question 2, it is probable Cohasset will be among a relatively small number of other early-starting towns to share in the State's first matching round and our State grant could be fully 100 percent of what we raise ourselves - or another $200,000.
Thus, in addition to all the other good reasons you have reported for Cohasset's adopting the Community Preservation plan, we have the compelling one that there is plenty of State money out there just for the taking. All we have to do is vote "Yes" on Question 2.

Save open space

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset now has a great opportunity to preserve its remaining open space. At the same time, the town can make affordable housing more available for its senior citizens and preserve historic buildings under the newly-passed Community Preservation Act (C.P.A.) which was signed into law last fall. C.P.A. will offer Cohasset's citizens real opportunities to retain our present quality of life. Under the new law, C.P.A. funds raised by a nominal surcharge of 1.5 percent on tax bills (excluding $100,000) together with state funds, will be used to create permanent funding for open land, historic resources and affordable housing. This assessment should amount to $66 per average ($400,000) Cohasset home. What can be done to assure the enactment of C.P.A.? Vote "yes" on Question 2 on the ballot at the town election on April 7.

School criticism

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to respond in writing to the criticism leveled against the school district by Mrs. Lenora Jenkins at our annual town meeting. Although I was given the opportunity to respond to these comments on the town meeting floor, I feel that I let my peers on the school committee down as well as the citizens of our town by not giving a more concise and forceful rebuttal.

The decision to hire a full-time business manager to replace our part-time business assistant has been a controversial one. The school committee, the board of selectmen, and the advisory committee always carefully scrutinize any addition to the school budget in an attempt to reconcile the schools' needs with restraint in our town expenditures. This particular expenditure makes a great deal of sense. We are operating a $10.1 million school district or business. Through no fault of our own, we are dealing with a massive paper trail; filing reports for state mandated programs, a maze of regulations surrounding educational reform; all of this while addressing the very fundamental goal of educating our children.

Two years after first meeting Mrs. Lenora Jenkins, I remain alternately baffled and angered and even occasionally amused by her relentless and ever changing list of criticisms regarding the Cohasset schools. Obviously Mrs. Jenkins occasionally observes the day-to-day operations of our schools, as evidenced by her show and tell items retrieved from the trash for her exhibit at town meeting. I have also spent time in our schools observing, as a parent, as a school committee member and as a student observing classes to fulfill requirements for a course. We see two very different districts. I observe an eighth-grade history teacher, who leads a discussion on the Industrial Revolution with great energy and insight, while blue buckets catch slimy residue from an exposed drainpipe in the back of the room. Mrs. Jenkins vigorously opposes the school renovation project. I observe a third- grade class present oral presentations on their family's heritage, a culmination of many weeks of research and study. Mrs. Jenkins complains that our experienced teachers are overpaid. I witness a long discussion with the recycling committee and student representatives who share a commitment to renewing our efforts to recycle at the Cohasset schools; the recycling bins are visible from where I sit in the high school library and they are full. Mrs. Jenkins rails against waste disposal practices without offering any constructive solutions.

Anyone truly intent on impacting our school district in a positive way must do more than publicly lambaste those who are attempting to make a sincere and lasting contribution to our schools. Of course there will be vigorous debate, there should be; of course there will be strong disagreements, there should be. But at the end of the day we must do more than criticize. We must be part of the solution. We must contribute time and ideas to finding solutions with an optimism and community spirit that recognizes the messy imperfect nature of us all. And we must soldier on for what is a very worthy goal, the public education of the children of our fine school district.

Seals resting

TO THE EDITOR:

We have had several seals on land in Little Harbor and some in view from the roads. To the viewer they sometimes appear to be in distress because of their actions on land. However, according to the New England Aquarium, this is typical behavior.

The important thing to remember is DO NOT GET CLOSE!!!! The closer you get the more stress you are putting on them. They are simply resting after a hardy meal.

Seals, although docile, can give a painful bite if bothered too much, so please do not let children get close.

If they stay for more than 24 hours, call the Aquarium and report their behavior to them.

Act benefits

TO THE EDITOR:

Your article on page one of the March 8 issue was an excellent summary of the Community Preservation Act's possible implementation in Cohasset. As a long-time preservationist, I was delighted to read it. In particular, I think it gave a fair estimate of the cost to taxpayers. However, on the matter of benefits to taxpayers, I would like to add the following, based on my reading of the Act:

1. Exemptions to the property tax increase would apply not only to the first $100,000 of residential property assessment, but also to property owned and occupied by qualifiers for low-income housing.

2. Also, no tax increase would be required of property owned and occupied by qualifiers for low or moderate-income senior housing.

3. The Act provides for building or renovating to create affordable housing including senior housing.

This last is especially important; in a well-run town, the town and school employees can afford to live there. The Community Preservation Act isn't just about open space, and on April 7, I'll vote for it.

AfTA story

TO THE EDITOR:

Just wanted to let you know how impressed I was after reading your lead article on AfTA in last week's paper. I think you did an excellent job covering this breaking story. John Bewick certainly is an important person and his comments on Greenbush are worth knowing about.

I must let you know that the insert they used in your papers was a reprint of a big story in Rolling Stone magazine that came out a two months ago. The data in the article is legit. The scientific community has long known about the harmful effects of diesel particulates. Our own South Shore group TREQ was covered in your paper a few years ago. The front page of Saturday's Globe had a story about the growing asthma crisis in Boston. Note the areas most impacted and you will notice that that is where the diesel train lines converge (see TREQ report/chart).

The MBTA knows very well they have a crisis on their hands. It is becoming ever more clear that they have adopted the same strategy as the tobacco industry: delay, deny, delay. But the drums are beating louder (the T has been forced to scrap dirty diesel buses) and they will soon be required to convert its diesel trains to electric. Won't that be a great day in Massachusetts?

For good public transportation

TO THE EDITOR:

As a member of AfTA, I want to compliment the Mariner on a well-written and thoughtful article on John Bewick and Advocates for Transportation Alternatives.

One of our most pressing goals has been to position the group as an advocate "for" good public transportation and not just another voice against Greenbush, and I thought the article fairly represented this important distinction.

Uppermost on AfTA's agenda is the quest for expanded commuter boat parking and a feeder bus service at the Hingham Shipyard. Last August we solicited comments from boat riders, which were subsequently submitted at a Hingham Planning Board meeting to discuss the merits of the Hingham Shipyard Development Plan. As a result of a complex juggling of space allotments, the development plan would have eliminated approximately 200 spaces used by boat riders. The Planning Board's most recent recommendation includes a decked parking facility with a capacity for 2,400 cars. Hopefully, the MBTA will fund the new parking facility, which is projected to cost $18 million dollars. This may seem like a lot of money, but in terms of cars removed from the roads during peak commuting hours (a goal for almost all public transportation projects) it's a bargain. The cost per car would be $7,500. By contrast, the cost per car during peak commuting hours for the $408 million Greenbush project, with a mere 1331 cars projected off the roads, would be $308,000 per car. AfTA is also looking into the possibility of federal funding for the project.

The group would also like the Shipyard plan to include operating space for a feeder bus system to enable boat riders to "commute" to the boats on buses powered by compressed natural gas (CNG). With such a system, the potential for the commuter boats to remove cars from the roads will be even greater. And we are also working on the other end, through Martha Bewick, to create a more viable commuter boat terminal as part of the Boston waterfront development.

AfTA continues to pressure state transportation authorities on commuter boat issues at every opportunity. Clearly, the Hingham and Quincy boats are one of the best public transportation buys around. All we have to do is get the state to wake up to this fact.

There are those who would argue that we can have both a train and the boat, but few of us believe the T will ever support water transportation on the South Shore if Greenbush is built. The need to boost Greenbush ridership, in order to justify what most certainly will be Big Dig-type cost over runs, will be so great that the T will never encourage the boat for fear it will draw riders from the train.

So, are we anti-Greenbush or are we for better alternatives? Hopefully South Shore commuters will conclude that we are the latter and that we are working responsibly on their behalf.

Accessory dwellings permits put on hold

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

There won't be a proliferation of "two-family" homes or in-law apartments in Cohasset in the near future.

An article —or item of business before town meeting —authorizing apartment conversions in single-family homes was deemed too complicated by a majority of those in attendance Saturday and was put on hold until potential glitches in the wording and questions about its implications could be worked out.

The issue will likely reappear in at the fall Special Town Meeting or the Annual Town Meeting a year from now.

If approved, the resulting zoning change — based on a similar ones in Scituate, Duxbury and Norwell — would have allowed up to ten building permits a year for homeowners to convert part of their houses into in-law type apartments.

As the result of an amendment adopted on Town Meeting floor, half of those permits would have been reserved for people 55 years of age and older.

But some at Town Meeting questioned if the town would get into a legal wrangle over age discrimination, while others argued to have all 10 permits reserved for senior citizens.

The impetus behind the article, which was backed by the Senior Housing Committee, was to provide a mechanism so that seniors could afford to remain in their homes by converting space into an apartment that they could either rent out or live in themselves and lease the rest of the house.

After considerable debate, Ted Guild of Jerusalem Road asked that the article be indefinitely postponed. He said he is in favor of the concept but thinks questions arising from the text of the lengthy article that included three sections and 23 subsections should be ironed out first.

"We want an appropriate and effective bylaw to provide housing for our senior citizens," said Guild, who said the article was flawed in several instances. "I feel we'd be better advised to come back in October."

Selectman Michael Sullivan stressed there needs to be a requirement for someone 55 or older living in either the main house or the apartment —or "otherwise we've gone for two-family zoning throughout town."

Others said there was nothing stated about "affordability" anywhere in the text of the article.

But Barbara Power of Beach Street, who serves on the Zoning Board of Appeals, encouraged voters to support the article.

"It's a good start, let's go for it instead of picking it to death," she said.

However, even Jim Laggrotteria, chairman of the Senior Housing Committee, said the wording was confusing.

"We offered nothing like the 'legalese' here," he said, about the final version of the article that appeared in the warrant and was changed as it wove its way through town boards earlier this year. "Our intent was to help the seniors."

Money for runway study

Town Meeting voted to appropriate $30,000 to help pay for a consultant to respond to the state environmental feasibility study on the proposed new Logan runway. The money will also be used to retain an attorney, familiar with environmental matters, to negotiate changing the traffic pattern to out over the ocean.

Article proponent Eric Oddleifson said the runway is not a delay reduction runway as touted by Massport, the state agency that governs Logan Airport. "This is a capacity enhancement runway," he said, "one that would add 100,000 flights over us."

But William White, 162 Sohier St., who is retired from the Federal Aviation Administration, disputed the noise impacts. He said over the past two decades, there has been movement toward quieter engines and smaller aircraft. He said the length of the new runway would restrict the type of aircraft landing there.

"I am not against looking at ways to maintain the environment of Cohasset," he said. "But at the same time, I don't think this is where to put $30,000 of the taxpayers' money."

White did not sway Town Meeting to oppose the appropriation, which passed easily.

Oddleifson said Hingham and Hull town meetings were expected also expected to participate equally in the effort.

Landfill emissions

Town Meeting soundly defeated a citizen petition to adopt strict regulations over gas emissions from landfill that would include the town landfill off Cedar Street. Article proponent John McNabb described the matter as a "public health issue." He said landfill gas contains many hazardous air pollutants.

But Bill Foley of the Advisory Committee said the by-law change would create over regulation and subject the town to stricter rules than those of the state.

"It would create something we may not have the manpower to enforce," he said.

Selectmen Chairman Tom Callahan described the potential bylaw as a "financial unknown" because the town did not have the in-house expertise and would have to hire outside experts.

Paul Barry, owner of Cohasset Heights Landfill, also spoke against the article. He said the Department of Environmental Protection monitors gas emissions at CHL. He explained that CHL closed almost three years ago and was close to being capped.

"Let's bring CHL to an end without creating more regulations at a financial cost to the town," Barry said.

Town authorizes 'wolf pit' purchase

Exact cost of land taking questioned

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset Town Meeting authorized the town to take the 'wolf pit' property, but not before a lengthy debate on the real value of the property.

Environmentalists are concerned that development of the property, part of the Aaron Reservoir watershed, could pose a harm to the town's water supply. But some believe that if the property could actually be developed, its price would be much higher than the $150,000 figure on the warrant article.

Town boards were split on whether to recommend the purchase. Both the Board of Selectmen and Advisory Committee backed the purchase. Selectman Fred Koed said purchasing the property now could save the town money in the long run.

But the Capital Budget Committee said it was concerned "the wolf pit could become a money pit."

Pratt Court resident Thomas Gruber agreed with the committee and said an eminent domain taking could come with a number of unanticipated costs. "There's a potential the property value could way, way exceed the value we have for it," he said. Gruber contended that not only will the town incur legal fees if the property's owners fight the land-taking, but said if the developer's intent is to split it up into separate parcels with $200,000 homes on each, the price could take a quick turn upward. "This could end up costing the town an awful lot of money," he said.

Dan Evans, of Nichols Road, argued that although the town may authorize $150,000 to buy the land, the actual price will probably be set by a judge and could be nowhere near the town allocation for it. "Once the order of seizure of has been filed, the town must pay due compensation," he said. "We can't predict what the judge may say."

David Ingber, a lawyer, said he knew of a case where a developer purchased some land for $2 million, developed some "conceptual plans for it" and fought the town when it tried to take the land. Ingber said the town ended up paying the developer $20 million because "conceptual plans existed." He pointed out that owner Wayne Sawchuk already has filed plans with the town, and suggested the price could be as high as $2-3 million.

But Selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Thomas Callahan both dismissed these arguments as scare tactics.

"That's an unfortunate story to scare us," McMorris said of Ingber's comments. "Because a plan is filed, does not mean the houses will be built. If it was a multi-million dollar property, we probably would have seen houses there already."

Callahan, a real estate lawyer, said Ingber's argument was faulty for two reasons. "The [Sawchuk] purchase just occurred [from the Bates/Pratt Family Trust], and if the lawyers sold a multi-million dollar property for $150,000, they would have a major lawsuit on their hands," Callahan said.

He also added that what Ingber said was a "very typical" strategy by developers to scare a town into buying it at an inflated rate. "Don't let us be duped by these scare tactics," Callahan said to the applause of Town Meeting.

However, William Smith argued that if the town wants to take a piece of property by eminent domain, then it is presuming that the land is developable.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said the town shouldn't "enter into an open-ended contract" and take the chance the property could be worth more than $150,000. "If it's only worth $150,000 and isn't developable, then we don't need to take it," he said.

Ripley Road resident Peter Pratt, one of the "heirs" of the Bates/ Pratt Family Trust said if the land was worth $2 - 3 million it would have received much more money than the $150,000 it got.

Board of Health member Peggy Chapman said her board will approve the project's septic system if the land is "perkable."

Sawchuk proposed avoiding a potential legal quagmire by conducting a land swap with the town. He said he'd give the town the wolf pit property if the town could give him another similar, developable parcel.

The name "wolf pits" came from a time when the wild animals roamed Cohasset, and were a major public safety threat. In several locations around town, pits were dug and covered over. A carcass would be either strung up over the pit or in the pit, causing the wolf to fall into it.

Two races top ballot experienced a good show of support. "The support has been overwhelming to date. People are asking me for more signs that I've had printed up," he said.

Both candidates said they like their chances as Election Day approaches.

"I've been working in campaigns for more than 20 years and one never takes anything for granted," said Pratt, a former selectman. "I just look forward to working with folks, should the voters choose me to serve in public office again."

Brown, president of the Cohasset Gridiron Club, said the decision is now up to the people of Cohasset. "If It's meant to be, it's meant to be," he said. "People make the choice; they'll decide."

A close race is expected in the battle for the two spots on the school committee. This is the first time there has been a race for school committee seats since 1998, interestingly, involving the two of the three candidates running this time.

Incumbents Pat Martin and Mark DeGiacomo hope to fend off a strong challenge from longtime School Building Committee member Adrienne MacCarthy.

"The campaign has been a real education for me," MacCarthy said. "But I do think I've reached out, met a lot of people and fielded some of their concerns."

Martin, the current school committee chairman, said she has enjoyed hitting the campaign trail. "It's always a great opportunity to get out there and know the issues and talk about what you've done and what you'd like to do," she said. "The feeling I get is that people are feeling really good with the school committee and how far we've come in the past three years."

DeGiacomo has been perhaps the quietest of the candidates, choosing to forego yard signs. But he has made it to the various candidates' nights, and is "cautiously optimistic."

He said, "I hope people in general know who I am, and what I've done in town and on the school committee, and would like me to stay on for another three years."

Martin added she hopes voters will "reflect on the many accomplishments" she and DeGiacomo have experienced on the committee together.

MacCarthy thinks the race has been beneficial for the school department. "I think the apple cart has been shaken up a bit, and there's been good talking and communication because of it," she said. "I think the schools will be better for it."

TOWN MEETING

$300K override passes muster at Town Meeting

includes approval at town meeting followed by a simple majority win at the polls.

Avery took the 265 voters in attendance on a verbal "aerial tour" of the town and pointed out such things as the new Osgood School, "rust-free" fire trucks and ambulances, salt and sand on the road, well-groomed athletic fields, and an active Council on Elder Affairs.

"These things are not free," he reminded the crowd. "Proposition 2 fi does not fit the new life of Cohasset."

The biggest chunk of the $25 million is made up by the $10.1 million school budget. In fiscal year 2002, the school department hopes to hire five new teachers, and give a financial boost to the supply budgets of the town's three schools. School Committee Chairman Pat Martin pointed out that 81 percent of the budget pays for departmental salaries, and that 103 new students have entered the school system over the past three years.

The largest objection of the budget revolved around the school committee's insistence of hiring a business manager for the school department.

Jerusalem Road resident Leonora Jenkins made a motion to reduce the school budget by $37,000 – the amount allocated for the hiring of a business manager. She chastised the school committee for not being more willing to work with town Finance Director Michael Buckley. "They weren't amenable to that," she said to the 265 residents in attendance. "They have to have it their way."

She was also critical about the school department's decision to outsource many of its services. Jenkins said since an outside company was hired to supply the schools with lunches, the amount of trash has increased. That was an example of some of the "hidden costs to the town" that came along with outsourcing, she said.

School committee member Stephanie Noble called the hiring of a full-time business manager an "upgrade" from the current part-time business assistant. "We're not adding to the head count," she said. Noble also reminded Town Meeting that the school department used to have a business manager until a few years ago when he resigned and then-Superintendent Stephen Hart decided not to fill the position.

Jenkins' motion was defeated.

The town budget easily passed shortly afterwards.

Town voters now have the option of approving the override Saturday or the town will have to cut $300,000 from its operating budget.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said if the override fails, he will have to go through the departmental budgets and make some cuts, but wouldn't speculate exactly where those cuts would be.

The $300,000 override, will add an additional 22 cents per $1,000 onto the tax rate. For a house valued at $400,000, that would mean an additional $105 to the tax bill. Including the normal 2 fi increase as allowed under the levy limit, and the proposed override, the same house's tax bill will increase from $5,836 to $6,302 for FY-2002.

Interestingly, the tax rate is scheduled to drop from $14.59 per $1,000, to $13.13. Haddad credited this to a 20 percent increase in property values throughout the town.

Voters will also be asked to approve a 1.5 percent surcharge on their tax bill for the Community Preservation Act, as well as vote in annual town election (see related stories).

Polls open at Town Hall at 8 a.m. and close at 6 p.m.

Land act is up for vote

is an opportunity to preserve what we love," said selectman Ronnie McMorris, who worked on getting the act on the ballot as a private citizen. "The open space, protection of natural resources, historical restoration, diversity...and we can do all of that, with help from the state. Over the first five years, the state will be matching us almost dollar for dollar."

McMorris added, "There's a lot of undeveloped land left out there."

But fellow selectman Merle Brown is against the ballot question. "We really don't have a plan for it. We don't have a growth and development plan, we don't know what we're going to do with the money," he said. "I guess we want to get the money and run with it."

Aside from the CPA, Cohasset residents will vote on a proposed $300,000 Proposition 2 1/2 override, and Brown said that it would add just too much to the tax rate.

Open Space Chairman Debbie Cook has been very vocal in her support for the CPA. "This gives the town a lot of flexibility to do a lot of projects that fall through the cracks," she said.

Cook also argued that "residential development costs more than the tax dollars it brings in."

She also said, though the amount the town receives in matching funds is contingent on how many communities enter into the program, the town can also take the money and get more matching grants from such groups as the Massachusetts Self-Help Program.

If Cohasset approves the CPA, it will be a five-year commitment. At the end of five years, the town could vote to get out of the program.

Finneran pays Murray a visit

The former selectman, Girl Scout leader, den mother, basketball coach, Marine, was selected out of a field of 15 people nominated by 42 different individuals.

"She could always find time for someone in need," said Finneran, who displayed genuine affection for Murray, and was more than willing to engage in repartee with her. "She is in the Hall of Fame of legislators."

Kevin Convey, editor in chief of Community Newspaper Company, presented the Citizen of the Year Award. Murray also received citations from the House and Senate, and a resolution from the Cohasset Board of Selectmen celebrating her service and recognition as Citizen of the Year. The selectmen's resolution received a standing ovation from Cohasset Town Meeting the day before.

Despite years of attending awards ceremonies, including a number of her own since January 2000 when she announced her retirement plans, Murray said she had never been as nervous as she was Sunday.

"I was afraid no one would show up," she said. Murray then went on to thank those in attendance. "I want to thank everyone, you've always been very supportive of me.

"I'm truly grateful."

Cohasset Mariner editor Mary Ford said the award was a "vehicle to recognize those among us who go that extra mile to make the town we love, a better place."

Past winners are the late Gerard Keating, Joe Buckley, Dr. Robert Sceery, the Rev. Gary Ritts, Anna Abbruzzese, Katherine Stanton, and the late Clark Chatterton.

This year's selection committee was made up of Ford and residents, Molly Hochkeppel, Ozzie Ingram, and Henry Rattenbury.

A new runway for Logan? Making your voice heard

The Massachusetts Port Authority and Federal Aviation Administration ("FAA") have proposed the construction of a new runway, know as Runway 14/32, as part of a package of infrastructure projects for Logan Airport called the "Airside Improvements Planning Project." The runway and the other projects are explained and analyzed in a recently-released document known as an Environmental Impact Statement/Report ("EIS/R"). Now, interested members of the public can review and comment on the EIS/R and the proposed runway.

What's going on with Runway 14/32?

The proposal to build a new runway at Massport made headlines two years ago when it was proposed. Now, the two agencies which are proposing the runway— the Massachusetts Port Authority ("Massport") and the Federal Aviation Administration ("FAA")— have released a second version of the document in which the runway was proposed, the EIS/R for the Logan Airside Improvements Project. The proposed runway must be studied under both state and federal environmental law before Massport and the FAA can build it. The state Secretary of Environmental Affairs will review the document as a final Environmental Impact Report to see whether it adequately complies with the requirements of the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act ("MEPA"). At the same time, the FAA will review the document as a supplemental draft Environmental Impact Statement under the National Environmental Policy Act ("NEPA").

What is in the EIS/R and how can I get a copy?

The EIS/R consists of two volumes of text and analysis, one volume of technical appendices and eight volumes of responses to comments filed on the first draft of the EIS/R. . In these documents, Massport and the FAA address issues that have been raised about the runway and its relationship to future operations at Logan Airport, such as:

Is there a need for a new runway and is its purpose only to address existing problems of delay or to increase airport capacity?

Are there alternatives to building a new runway at Logan, either changes to be made at Logan (for example, using pricing mechanisms to reduce airport congestion at peak travel times) or by diverting passengers from Logan to rail and other regional airports?

What causes delays at Logan Airport and how much of the delay problem will the runway solve?

What are the runway's environmental impacts, such as noise and air pollution?

What measures will Massport and the FAA take to reduce environmental impacts if the runway is built?

Copies are available for public review at libraries in Boston and other cities and towns. Massport is also planning to make a CD Rom or electronic version available. For more information or to get a copy of the EIS/R, contact Mr. Flavio Leo, Massport Manger of Aviation Planning and Development at (617) 568-3500 or fleo@Massport.com.

What is the purpose of the public comment period?

The public comment period allows individuals and organizations to voice their concerns and opinions to Massport and the FAA, as well as to state and federal environmental agencies. What you think about this project counts. Even if you have previously made comments about the runway, you should express your viewpoint during this important stage in the review process. Comments can address any issues or concern, such as:

- whether the technical analysis in the EIS/R is valid and whether additional analysis or studies are needed;
- whether Massport and the FAA have given enough consideration to alternatives to the proposed runway;
- whether the EIS/R has identified all of the adverse environmental consequences of the proposed runway; and
- whether you think the runway should be built and/or what measures the FAA and Massport should have to take to reduce its environmental impacts if it does get built.

To comply with certain federal and state laws, federal and state officials are specifically seeking public input on:

- the economic, social and environmental effects of the runway and its consistency with local planning; and
- how the proposed runway will affect flight patterns arriving and/or departing from Logan Airport.

How can I participate in the public review process?

You can make your comments at a public hearing, submit comments in writing or both. Currently only one joint state-federal public hearing has been scheduled, for April 25 at the Radisson Hotel at 200 Stewart Street in Boston. The hearing is scheduled to start at 3pm and resume at 6pm for an evening session. If you think the timing or location of the hearing does not allow enough time to review and evaluate the EIS/R, you should ask the FAA and Massport to extend the public comment period and/or hold additional public hearings in other locations.

Comments at public meetings are important but they are not substitutes for filing written comments. Written comments are due in early May, with slightly different deadlines for the state and federal processes.

The same comments can be filed with the Federal and State agencies. Don't be intimidated by the process or the size of the document—just state your concerns as clearly and concisely as possible in your own words.

What happens after the public comment period?

Usually the state and federal environmental review processes are used to generate information on which to base permits, but in this case Massport can proceed to build the runway with few if any permits. Massport will, however, need to convince a state judge to lift an injunction which prohibits Massport from building the runway.

After the public comment period closes, the state and federal review processes are different. Under the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act, the Secretary of Environmental Affairs will issue a Certificate stating whether the final EIR complies with MEPA. If the Secretary finds it does not comply, Massport would have to prepare a supplemental final EIR and circulate it for public review. If the Secretary finds that it does comply, Massport must then make findings under Section 61 of MEPA specifying what it will do to ensure that "all feasible means and measures" have been taken " to avoid or minimize" adverse environmental impacts. A draft of Massport's Section 61 findings is contained in the final EIR so that the public can comment on them.

Creating a vision for Cohasset's future

TOWN PLANNING

MICHAEL WESTCOTT

As a new member of the Cohasset Growth and Development committee, I was surprised to find out that Cohasset has not had a comprehensive Town Plan in 40 years. Given all the new development, both residential and commercial, coupled with recent proposed village changes, I think many would agree that the time has come to gather input and together consider the future of Cohasset. The charter of this committee, chaired by Rick Swanborg, is to help build a town-wide consensus on a long-range plan for Cohasset.

We are now starting work to create a vision for the town that is sensitive to the values and issues of its citizens in the areas of environment, economic base and community character.

Over the coming months we will provide a constant flow of information to all Cohasset residents and inviting your opinions. This extensive process is designed to gather input from all corners of the town through a series of neighborhood meetings and a comprehensive survey so that together we can create a vision for the future of Cohasset and a plan to support it.

The first piece of information that may be of interest is the results of a small preliminary survey from the March 2000 town meeting. The survey was distributed to those in attendance and the 80 responses, while not a large sample, provided some insight into why respondents appreciate our town and what issues they see as important to its future.

The majority (65 percent) came here for the beauty Cohasset offers and 72 percent plan to stay forever or until they retire. This helps explain why people feel as strongly as they do about so many issues here and continually express the desire to keep it vital and affordable.

But the issues that were most important to those 80 respondents may surprise you. Eighty percent were interested in seeing the town pursue more communal solutions to wastewater treatment and 82 percent expressed a desire for the town to purchase more open space and properties. Rounding out the top five issues were concerns about transportation, education and the fiscal management of the town.

To see the complete results of this preliminary survey and related Growth & Development Committee information visit www.cohassetma.com or pick up a copy at the town offices. Your opinion counts and we are looking for volunteers to host neighborhood dialogs all over town this summer. If you are interested, please contact Liz Harrington, town planner at 383-3517.

April is National Poetry Month. The Paul Pratt Memorial Library celebrates by displaying poems inspired by Dr. Seuss and written by Deer Hill students. Library patrons will be invited to write a short poem on a paper "leaf" in the Children's Room and attach it to the "poet-tree" on the wall.

Also celebrate National Poetry Month by nominating a poet for a U. S. postage stamp! Ballots are available at the library or online. To date, the United States Postal Service has issued 18 stamps honoring American poets. This is sponsored by the Academy of American Poets. For more information, contact the Suzanne Terry, Children's Librarian at 383-1348.

COHASSET CARES

Ecotopia

By: Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The last thing I want is human suffering, pain, discord, anger, squabbling. I am theorizing that environmentalists are utopians. I know I've had a love affair with the earth for nearly 70 years and that I have a strong idealistic streak. Whether it's having parents who were teachers and religious/spiritual, growing up during WWII and attending YMCA summer camp for so many years, having lots of caring, hard-working, down-to-earth relatives, going through the Vietnam era as an English teacher and alternative school director, or what, I've always been drawn to the concept of utopian societies.

Well, it's been done. That is, for the last few days I've been listening to and thinking about Ernest Callenbach's Ecotopia. I couldn't locate the book so had to settle for the audiotapes. I only have enough space left to quote the back of the box for now:

Classic visionary journey into future

Dateline - the early 21st Century. The nation of Ecotopia — made up of what was once Washington, Oregon, and Northern California — has been independent of the United States for 20 years. Now, for the first time since its secession, this mysterious society is allowing an outsider to enter its borders and report on its way of life.

Ecotopia is a story of social, political and personal transformation, a told by journalist William Weston. His public on-air reports describe in detail the survival-oriented culture he has come to investigate. His intimate personal diaries record his inner thoughts and deepening involvement with the land and its people - especially with his lover, the vital, independent, passionate Marissa.

Ecotopia is one of the most important ecological novels ever written. This international bestseller - 11 printings translated into eight languages portrays a society which uses technology instead of being used by it. A society that could work. Ecotopia is a vision of promise and potential one that is not only possible, but that might actually enable the human race to survive.

To be continued. See you next time.

Hingham symphony pre-concert lecture

Adams, Smetana, Ives, the three composers featured in April 7's Hingham Symphony Orchestra Masterworks 2 concert, are not your well-known Beethoven, Mozart and Brahms. But HSO Music Director Jin Kim feels they are most deserving of their "Masterwork" status. Kim will explain what makes these works great, in a half-hour lecture before this Saturday's concert.

According to Kim, many people know more than they think about either these composers, or their major works. For example, John Adams composed "The Chairman Dances" (Foxtrot for Orchestra) in 1987, as an offshoot of his successful modern opera, "Nixon in China." Performed in the opera while the Nixons are dancing and reminiscing, it evokes the idea of a Hollywood foxtrot from 60 years ago. Smetana's "Die Moldau," with its vivid images of the majestic river, has become a beloved tune, and Smetana is recognized as the first Czech nationalist composer. And Charles Ives, a native of Connecticut, infused his Second Symphony with references to the many kinds of music that were played in New England when he was growing up in the late 19th century. Listeners hear bits of Beethoven and Brahms, as well as fragments of Stephen Foster, march tunes, and popular Gospel hymns. Although composed around 1900, the symphony was performed for the first time in 1951, by Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic.

Under Jin Kim's guidance, the professional Hingham Symphony has treated the South Shore to a wide range of music for orchestra. The pre-concert lectures, begun this season, are a fun, interesting way to learn more about the music and the stories behind it. The lecture begins at 7 p.m., the concert is at 8, April 7, in Sanborn Auditorium, Hingham Town Hall, 120 Central St. Tickets are $20 for adults, $18 seniors, $10 youth, and are available at the door. Track teams should be in the hunt

Boys build on last year's success, while girls rebuild on fly

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

By the looks of the first few weeks of practice, the boys and girls track teams should have another superb season, possibly topping the accomplishments of last year.

The boys team, who fell one meet short of the league title after a loss to SSL champions Carver, should again be in contention for a high finish in the league and some personal glory at the post-season state meets.

"They have been real productive," said third year coach Al LaFountain of his boys squad. "They boys can smell their bid for a State championship."

Of course, the Cohasset squad will have their hands full with the talent pool in the South Shore appearing to be as deep as ever. For starters, perennially powerful Carver looks to be loaded again.

"We have a couple of teams we have to watch out for," noted LaFountain.

Placing ninth in last year's States, the boys will be led by senior captain Brian Krupczak, who has never lost the 200 meter race for as long as any Skipper fan can remember.

Krupczak, Cohasset's outstanding running back this past fall, is so dominant in his events, opposing coaches will often take their top sprinters out of the 200, simply conceding the race to the senior.

The junior captains will be Tim Baird, the ninth place overall finisher in the Cohasset Road Race this past Sunday and third place finisher in the mile at state's last year, and Peter Maitland, who is expected by his coach to clear six feet in the high jump, qualify in the 800 meter run with a time close to two minutes, and finish in the top three in the state in the javelin.

In the distance events, Baird is shooting to get his mile time below 4:40, but will be in hot pursuit in both that event and the two mile by junior Dan Kinchla and sophomore Ross Lieb-Lappen, the second place youth finisher in the Road Race.

One of the Skippers' top events will be the men's 4x100 meter relay race. The explosive Krupczak starts the race, and is followed by junior sprinter Steve Laney, freshman Erik Belz. Junior Jason Brown, in his first year on the track team, will anchor the team.

Senior Craig Parker, an incredibly strong thrower for the team, could very well win the league in both the shot put and the discus. Junior Liam Martin, who can run both short and long distances extremely well, has his top event in the high jump, where his coach has "raised the bar" to for 6'2" this year for him.

Joining Martin in the 400 meter event will be sophomore Ian Kidder, who has both endurance and sprinting ability, as he has competed in both the mile event and the 100 meter event.

There are a few more question marks on the girls side of things, with the Lady Skippers having lost a good number of talented athletes to graduation and no-shows.

Though the main focus for this season will be rebuilding, LaFountain still feels this squad could be competitive in the SSL.

"We could be competitive in the next two years," predicted LaFountain, who is hoping to put in a strong bid for the league this year.

Senior captains Maureen Equi and Kathleen McCarthy, state qualifiers in the low and high hurdles, respectively, will lead the attack with great speed and athleticism.

Senior Kerry McCarthy could very well qualify for state's in a number of running events, while sprinter Catherine Flaherty has already proved herself as a state contending high jumper.

There is a lot of new interest in girls track this year, with 10 freshman coming aboard, including early standouts Shelly Carter, Gillian Weber and Jen Buckley.

"I can put them anywhere," said a smiling LaFountain, referring to the three versatile freshman.

LaFountain admits to running very intense practices, but justifies this as being vital to the drive towards a league title. He focuses two days a week on field events and weight training, the other three on running.

"If you are in shape, the practices are easy," he stated. "It all depends on the athlete."

Promising start for Lady Skippers

Lacrosse team impresses with season opening 10-4 win over Dover-Sherborn

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

When compared to the long and proud histories of such Cohasset sports as basketball and wrestling, girls lacrosse is relatively small blip on the screen. But with a host of young talent and a core of experience, the Lady Skippers should find themselves in the thick of a South Shore League race.

"It is exciting since we are such a young team," reported coach Kathy Guadiano, who is in her second year as a varsity coach for Cohasset.

"The way we are looking at it, we will be together for two more years."

The girls got off to a great start in their season opener Tuesday afternoon, dominating Dover-Sherborn, 10-4. Sophomore Sera Genovese scored three of her four goals in the first half of the Pilgrim South tilt. Junior captain Kristen Sheerin scored three goals and sophomore Maura McKenney added a pair. Goalie Gia Petrakis made 11 saves to earn the win in net for the Lady Skippers.

Guadiano coached last year for the varsity, and was the Middle School coach two years ago.

The two captains of the team, Sheerin and fellow junior Carlie Carter, who both led the gymnastics team to a very successful season this past winter, will provide some much needed experience for the young squad.

All-Scholastic boys basketball team

Cohasset's Bilodeau named among area's elite

First Team

TJ Bilodeau - Guard
Senior (Capt.) - Cohasset

The 12 individuals you see honored here are the ones we determined through research and personal observation to be the top male high school basketball players in Marinerland (i.e. Abington, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Kingston, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Rockland and Scituate).

As you might imagine, this was no easy task. In fact, we went from five to six players per team because it was just too difficult to limit ourselves to 10 overall. Not that choosing these final two from the remaining field was a walk in the park.

Several of the hoopsters you see recognized here as High Honorable Mentions received serious consideration for All-Scholastic honors. In fact, one of the most difficult omissions was Cohasset captain Erik Shea, whose heady floor game and long range shooting played a huge role in making the Skippers the surprise team of the South Shore League this season.

The big gun on the South Shore League's Cinderella team this winter... Bilodeau led the 14-8 Skippers with a team high 17 points per game with a lethal combination of outside shooting and penetration...was at his best when the game was on the line, as five times this season he was the central figure for Cohasset in last minute wins, including a runner at the buzzer that beat South Shore League champion Carver...also played hurt, shaking off a severely sprained ankle to toss down 15 points in the Skippers first round tourney win over Foxboro... although he played shooting guard, T.J. also averaged nearly five assists per game...a South Shore League All-Star and an All-

Scholastic selection by the Patriot Ledger…Would like to play Div. 3 college basketball with Bowdoin and Amherst among the possibilities… Also a standout on the baseball diamond for C.H.S, a starting middle infielder the last three seasons for the Skippers…10th year Cohasset Coach Ron Ford: "I've had some great captains, but I've never had anyone who worked harder than TJ day in and day out, in practice ands in games. He just left it all out there. He left it all on the floor, and that's why he's gotten the absolute most out of his ability."

Chris Conroy- Guard
Senior (Capt.) - Silver Lake

It seems safe to say that Conroy is one of the most complete and efficient players the South Shore has seen in many years…An excellent passer, shooter, slasher, ball-handler and defender who led the Lakers to a second straight Old Colony League crown this season. In fact, the team lost only one in-league game over the last two seasons…A three time OCL All-Star, and the league's MVP as a junior…finished his career as Silver Lake's all-time leading scorer for boys basketball with 1,289 points…led the OCL in scoring this season with 24.6 points per game… shot 54 percent from the field this season, a feat made all the more remarkable given how much damage he did from three-point land…The 6-foot-1-inch guard finished second for the Lakers in rebounding (136) and steals (33)…is being recruited by several colleges, but has narrowed his choice to Bentley or St. Anselm's…named to All-Scholastic teams by the Patriot Ledger, Boston Globe and Boston Herald……WATD Old Colony League Player of the Year…plays AAU basketball year round…Longtime Silver Lake Coach Dick Arieta: "Chris is simply the best all around player I've ever coached. He was great in all areas offensively, probably our best man-to-man defender and he was a great leader. On top of that, he's just a great kid. Players like that obviously don't come along too often."

James Smith - Guard
Junior - Abington

Was the leading scorer for the South Shore League runners up, averaging 14.8 points per game…A great shooter, Smith did some damage this season with his soft jump-shot…Also a great defender, Smith often guarded his opponent's best scorer…Was a force for Abington in the team's heartbreaking three-point loss to league and Div. 3 South Sectional champs Carver, scoring 23 points…Smith scored 22 points against league rival Cohasset in the first round of the South Sectional tourney…In the quarterfinal loss to Rockland, Smith was solid with 10 points…The SSL All-star and two-year starter was selected to the Patriot Ledger and Enterprise All-Scholastic teams, and was voted by his teammates as the Underclassmen Player of the Year…Will be a top returnee next year. Abington coach Don Byron: "James has a very well-rounded game. He's obviously great offensively, but he's he plays good defense as well. He just shut down other teams' high scorers."

Bob Murphy - Point guard
Senior - Rockland

Keying the offense and defense are this speedy guard's greatest strength…A natural athlete, Murphy was the player "everyone had to stop," according to coach Bob Fisher…A Patriot League All-star, Murphy was assist leader, averaging seven per game for Rockland, which tied Scituate for the PL title… Murphy's ability to steal and score on transition were a major component to the Bulldog offense, which landed them in the Div. 3 South Sectional semifinals…Though he didn't shoot a lot, Murphy—despite missing six games due to injury—still averaged 10 points per game, mostly in part to his average four steals per game…Murphy is, of course, more well-known for his football abilities as the top running back for Rockland, the 2000 Div. 3 Super Bowl champs…As a result, Murphy was selected to the Mariner All-Scholastic football team last fall. Rockland coach Bob Fisher: "He's just a given. His ball pressure was good, his penetration was excellent, he's a great defender and handles the ball well. He was always put on the opponent's best scorer and was able to contain him. Teams couldn't press us because he's so fast."

Gerry Corcoran - Forward
Sophomore (Capt.) - Norwell

Arguably one of this region's most talented players…the 6-foot-5-inch super soph is already being recruited by Div. 1 colleges…led the South Shore League in scoring this season with 24.6 points per game to help lead the Clippers to a 14-8 season…also led the Clippers in rebounding with 10.1 caroms per game…Providing he stays healthy, he should be a lock to join the elite 2,000 career points club, having amassed 940 through his first two seasons… Plays AAU basketball year round… A two time South Shore League All-Star…Showed steady improvement in virtually all areas this season, a truly frightening prospect for South Shore League rivals. In particular, he was clearly more intent on driving to the basket, which resulted in nearly four times as many trips to the foul line than he had as a freshman… Norwell Head Coach John Willis: "There was a lot of pressure on Gerry this year. It's important to remember he's just 15 years old. All things considered, I like the way he responded. He knew there were areas he needed to improve on to become a more complete player, and he made progress in all of them."

Joel Racicot - Guard
Senior (Capt.) - Scituate

Joel averaged over 14.4 points per game to lead a Scituate team virtually no one considered a serious contender to a 14-6 (10-2 in league) record and a share of the Patriot League championship with Rockland… absolutely lethal off the dribble, particularly with pull-up jumper… named Patriot League co-Player of the year by WATD (along with East Bridgewater's Kevin McDermott)… A Patriot League All-Star…plays AAU basketball year round…Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic…is leaning heavily towards attending Emerson College next year and playing basketball… Scituate coach Matt Poirier: "Joel is a self made player. He's a real gym rat who's never satisfied with his game. Joel is also a really hard nosed player who gets the most out of his talent. On top of that, he just really good kid who gets it done in the classroom too."

Second Team

Jon Platz- Center
Senior (Capt.) - Silver Lake

The 6'foot-4 center was the "inspirational leader" (according to Silver Lake Coach Dick Arieta) on a Lakers team that lost only one game in the Old Colony League the last two seasons, taking the league crown both times…Led the Lakers in rebounding (146), while averaging 10.1 points per game…Despite his slender frame, Platz regularly held his own against much bigger opposing pivotmen and proved an excellent finisher in close …Old Colony League All-Star... Silver Lake Coach Dick Arieta: "Jon is a very enthusiastic and emotional player. He was one of those players who didn't have to have the ball in his hands a lot to be a big factor in the game, not to say he didn't know what to do with it when he did have it. He was a great leader for us."

Nick French - Forward
Senior - Abington

This talented 6'3" senior was a major threat on the inside for the South Shore League's second place Green Wave, averaging 11.5 points and 7.6 rebounds per game…Also an excellent three-point shooter, French scored 16 points in Abington's hard loss to cross-town rival Rockland in the Div. 3 South Sectional tournament…A two-year starter, French was a SSL All-star…On April 8 at Merrimack College, French will be one of only 10 seniors from the South to participate in the Massachusetts State Basketball Coaches Association's top 80 game, which highlights the top senior talent in the state…A year-round player, French will take his basketball talents to Emerson College next year. Abington coach Don Byron: "He's got good size and though he played very well for us inside, he could also handle the ball like a guard if necessary. That was nice to have. He was probably the most consistent player on the team. He's a good senior leader and will be missed."

Greg Sowyrda - Forward
Junior - Hingham

Hailed by coach Dan Clune as the Harbormen's top defensive player, Sowyrda's impact on the defensive end caused headaches for opposing offenses…A great ball-handler, Sowyrda often had no problem breaking presses and scoring on transition…The kind of player who doesn't show up often in the stat books, doing most of his work behind the scenes…Although hailed for his defensive efforts, Sowyrda was also a great scorer for Hingham, averaging 10 points per game…A Patriot League All-star, Sowyrda will be one of the top returnees on next year's Harbormen team. Hingham coach Dan Clune: "He's the only player I had who hustled the whole time, every play, more than anyone else. We'd always put him on the toughest player on the opponent's team, working to contain and deny the ball. He's a great player."

Matt McDonald - Center
Junior - Rockland

Came alive this year for the Patriot League champion Bulldogs, who tied Scituate for the title…Was the only Rockland player to play in every game this year, according to coach Bob Fisher…Was a force on the inside for Rockland, compensating his 6'1" stature with his muscular frame…Was a great scorer, averaging 12 points per game, and was the team's leading rebounder with 10 per game and 200 this year…Was essential in two big wins against Scituate when seniors Bob Murphy and Ken Keefe were out…McDonald is also a fantastic football player on Rockland's 2000 Div. 3 Super Bowl championship team and was a Mariner All-Scholastic for football last fall…Will be one of the Bulldogs' top returnees in both sports. Rockland coach Bob Fisher: "He overachieved what I expected of him this year. He was the only stabilizing force when Murphy and Keefe were out and that says something about him. He's got great upper body strength and has good defense inside. He plays will extreme focus because he hates to lose. He takes it personally."

Bill Forte - Forward
Junior (Capt.) - Marshfield

Was the leading scorer on the Rams team this year, averaging 13 points per game…Forte was an excellent free-throw shooter, sinking 75 percent of his shots from the line…Was an Atlantic Coast League All-star for Marshfield, captained the team this year, and was already selected as a senior captain for next year…At 6'1", Forte was also an excellent three-point shooter, as witnessed in a game against ACL rival Whitman/Hanson, in which Marshfield was down one until he sank a three-pointer with two seconds left to win the game…A lefty, Forte had a nice drive to the hoop and also played great defense inside the paint and was put on the opponent's best scorer…Forte had two 20-plus points games, including 23 points against ACL rival Duxbury, and 22 points against Quincy. Marshfield coach Paul Wholey: "Billy has worked very hard this year. He was a great leader and an excellent shooter. He has some height but played even bigger than his size. He played hard and well."

Jesse McKinnell – Forward
Senior - Scituate

The two time Patriot League All-Star should be a dominant force for the Sailors next year… averaged 12.5 points and 11 rebounds per game this season to help lead Scituate to a Patriot League co-championship …The athletic 6-foot-5 forward possesses a nice array of inside moves and a soft touch…plays AAU basketball year round…Scituate coach Matt Poirier: "Jesse is a lot like Joel (Racicot). He's a gym rat who really works hard to improve. He's as good as he is because he works extremely hard. He plays with a lot of emotion, and think he'll only get better as he keeps learning to channel that."

Coastal Stars Mite B's skate into playoffs

In an exciting, down-to-the wire contest, the Coastal Stars Mite B team lost to number-one ranked Plymouth Saturday in the South Shore Conference ice hockey semifinals. The final score was 5-3 with Plymouth's final goal dribbling into an empty net during the last seconds of play.

The team was made up of players from Cohasset and Marshfield and was the only representative from the Coastal Stars organization to make it into the South Shore Conference playoffs. Led by head coach Brian Dougherty and assistant coach Mike Maher, the Stars eked into the eighth and final playoff position with a regular season record of 11-13-2.

In the first round of the single elimination playoff game, the underdog Stars came out strong against top-rated Plymouth. The Plymouth team came into the game with only three losses all season and the best record of the entire 16 Mite B teams in the conference.

Undaunted by their opponent's winning record, the Stars scored first and spent the first two periods leading by a goal or tied, going into the final period up three goals to two. A power-play goal by Plymouth tied the game again late in the third and was followed up minutes later by what would prove to be the game-winning goal by the Plymouth offense. The Stars put the pressure on in the final minutes, pulling their goalie and adding a fourth forward; but a strong defensive clear from in front of the Plymouth crease made its way down the center of the ice into the empty net, sealing the victory for Plymouth.

The Stars' offense was led this year by the standout play of centers Sawyer Salvetti and Ian Quinlan, both of whom recorded hat tricks during the season. John Glynn, Mike Payne, Mike Maher, Kyle Anderson, Nick Harnish, Conner Donovan, Conner White and Danny Ahern also had strong offensive performances throughout the season.

The defense was anchored by goaltender Nick Commesso who had six regular season shutouts and defensemen Kevin Dougherty, Mike Kirsch, CJ Clapp, Sean Ahern and Mike Bird whose father Joe Bird was also an assistant coach.

"They are outstanding leaders," said Guadiano. "They are leading by example. They're very fair and very dedicated."

Sheerin is expected to be one of the team's top scorers this season, while Carter will lead the charge on the other side as a defender once she has recovered from her torn ACL.

"Kristin will be the leader of our attack and [Carlie] will be the main leader on defense," said Guadiano. "It is nice to have two strong leaders on both ends of the field."

The only senior on the team—Maja Heldon, a foreign exchange student from Sweden— is in her first year of playing, and has looked sharp thus far in practices.

In addition to Heldon and Sheerin on offense, Genovese and junior Suzanne Lynner have shown great skills in attacking the goal.

McKenney, a sophomore, has looked sharp at miefield, as has freshman Nicole Turgiss. Guadiano has said that she will be crucial in allowing Cohasset to control the center of the field.

With Carter on defense will be sophomores Katherine Coyne and Julie Lordan, both of whom had great seasons last year.

Petrakis, a sophomore, returns for another season between the pipes after a very strong freshman campaign.

"Gia had an outstanding season as a freshman at the varsity level," praised Guadiano. "So we are expecting big things out of her."

Guadiano has been pleased with the first two weeks of practice she has had with her team. She likes to separate her practices into a four different sections: agility work, stick work, conditioning and scrimmages.

"We have had some very strong practices," said coach Guadiano. "It has been a nice surprise."

Of the four sections of practice, the coach feels that the scrimmage is the most fun and the most important. She feels that how well and how hard her players perform in practice will determine how they will do once the ball is rolled out for real.

"They have to be able to do it in game situations," said Guadiano. "Sloppy practice will lead to sloppy playing."

High expectations for C.H.S Boys' lacrosse

Three years have passed since the Cohasset High boys' varsity lacrosse team qualified for the state tournament, and new coach Kevin Orcutt believes the drought is about to end.

"If we play hard, intelligently and as a team, we should be successful," said Orcutt.

Returning starters at every position, the Skippers will be led by senior co-captains Ronan Buick, a Pilgrim Conference all-star midfielder and two-time Bay State Games medalist, midfielder Lane Forrer, and defenseman Geoff McWilliams. The three captains, said Orcutt, provide exceptional leadership both on the field and off.

On offense, 25-goal scorer Buick will get a lot of support from his veteran attackmen. Junior Paul Previte, a 20-goal scorer in 2000 and Bay State Games silver medalist, should be even more effective, as will be sophomore Curt Kahn, who tallied five goals against Sandwich and three versus Barnstable after taking over a starting spot halfway through the season. Junior Jason Moore, a two-year starter with outstanding one-on-one skills, and transfer student Eric Libby, who started for tournament qualifier Xaverian a year ago, give Cohasset a level of depth at the position that may be unmatched in the program's 12-year history.

At midfield, Orcutt and assistant coach Terry Kahn are still working out line combinations. Juniors David DeVito and Sean Chase, and sophomores Matt Davis and Robert Hickey — all returning lettermen — figure to see action on the first two lines, along with Forrer and Buick. A wild card is sophomore transfer Tom Anderson, who just last week was granted eligibility by the MIAA. He impressed the coaches with his play during the first week of practice, and will likely find a place on the first two lines. Sophomore Pat Riordan, a first-year player, adds depth to the midfield corps.

Defense is also a position of strength, anchored by senior McWilliams, a 6-foot-3-inch two-year starter with excellent stick skills and speed. He's joined by senior Justin Langham, a former starting midfielder who sat out all of the 2000 spring season rehabbing a knee injury, senior Greg Figureido and sophomore Nick Spirito, who started every game as a freshman.

"We've got a tough group of kids on defense," said Orcutt. "They're willing to get physical, and are relentless on ground balls."

In the goal is junior Kyle Weber, who took over the starting job midway through last season. Weber, a league all-star candidate, won a silver medal at last summer's Bay State Games.

"I'm very pleased with the number of freshmen we have out, and with their enthusiasm and commitment," said Orcutt.

The seven freshmen – defensemen Stephen Davis, Conor Buick and Dan Roth, midfielders Mark Davis and Mike Hajjar, attackman Mike Devine and goalie Nick Murphy – provide added depth for the 24-man squad. All should see playing time and gain valuable experience during the season.

Despite finishing 6-10 last season, the Skippers wound up being ranked seventh in Division Two by the national laxpower.com web site, due to a demanding schedule and extremely close games with division powers like Ashland, Sandwich and state champ Milton. A somewhat less demanding 2001 schedule, coupled with a veteran squad, suggest this could be the year the Skippers return to post-season play.

Cohasset took it to Westwood on Thursday in a scrimmage with a 12-2 win. Ronan Buick had four goals and an assist, Paul Previte three goals and an assist, and Curt Kahn three assists and a goal. Anderson had a goal and two assists. The defense was outstanding, and gave Westwood only five shots the entire game.

Orcutt was particularly impressed with his players in the fourth quarter, when they scored on all five of their shots.

Cohasset was scheduled to open the season at home with Scituate on Wednesday in a non-league battle

The team begins Pilgrim Conference play with Norwell on Friday, April 6 at 4 p.m.

The Skippers' schedule: Tuesday, April 3 – Scituate, 3:30 pm; Friday, April 6 – Norwell, 4 pm; Tuesday, April 10 – at Barnstable, 4 pm; Thursday, April 12 – at Hanover, 3:30 pm; Friday, April 20 (vacation) – at Bourne, 1 pm; Saturday, April 21(vacation) – at Walpole, 1 pm; Tuesday, April 24 – Sandwich, 4 pm; Friday, April 27 – Falmouth, 7 pm; Tuesday, May 1 – Hanover, 6 pm; Friday, May 4 – at Norwell, 3:30 pm; Tuesday, May 8 – at Hingham, 3:30 pm; Friday, May 11 – Barnstable, 7 pm; Tuesday, May 15 – Duxbury, 6 pm; Friday, May 18 – at Marshfield, 3:30 pm; Monday, May 21 – at Catholic Memorial, 4 pm; Wednesday, May 23 – Ashland, 7 pm; Tuesday, May 29 – EMASS Tournament Preliminary Round

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse gobbles up Sandwich

The Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program, coming off its most successful season ever, opened the 2001 spring season by sweeping teams from Sandwich at all age levels on April 1.

The Cohasset Blue Under-12 team, got the season off on the right foot with a 14-4 victory over Sandwich 1. Michael Bunstein scored two of his five goals in the first quarter, and Mark Flibotte added two of his hat trick to get the Cohasset squad out to a 4-0 first quarter lead. Parker Beg opened the second quarter strong, scoring an unassisted goals and getting his second assist of the game on a feed to Peter Ernst to open the lead to 6-0 before Sandwich broke through. The teams then traded goals to get to 9-3 at halftime.

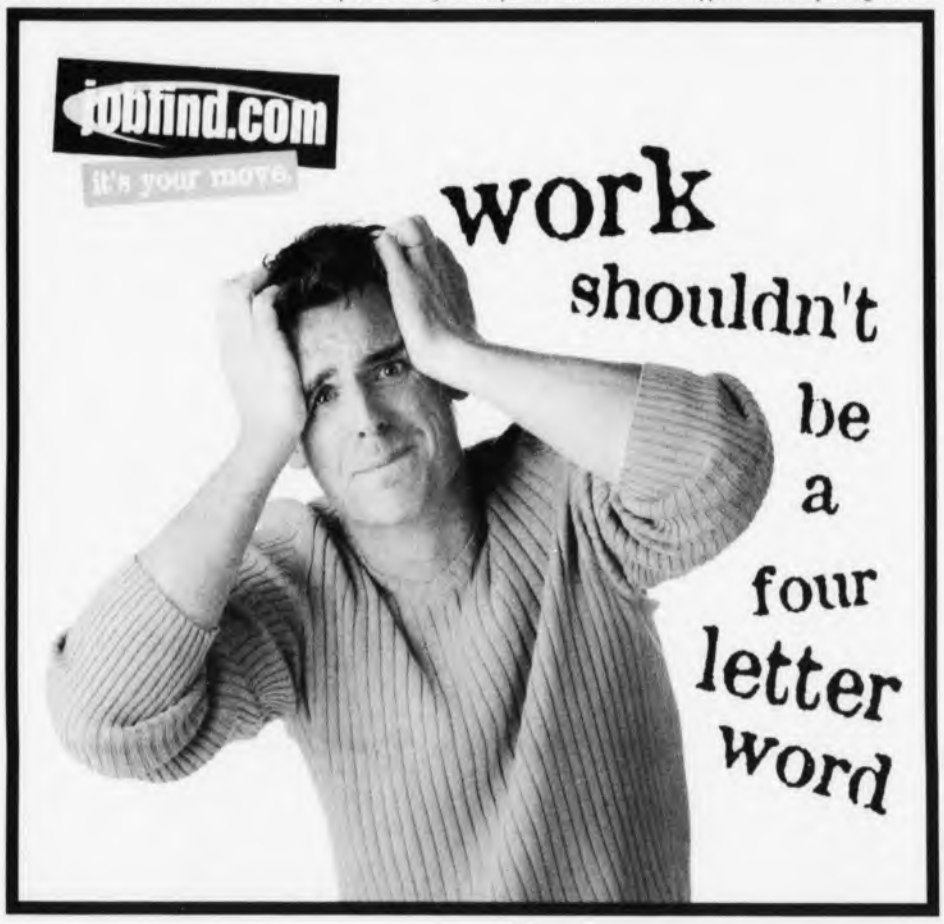
With the sloppy field conditions, play tightened up a bit in the second half, but Cohasset was able to extend its lead, and then close out the game by shutting Sandwich out in the fourth quarter.

Dan Trendowicz and Nick Zappolo each scored twice to close out the goal scoring, while Alexander Shipp and Eric MacCarthy added assists.

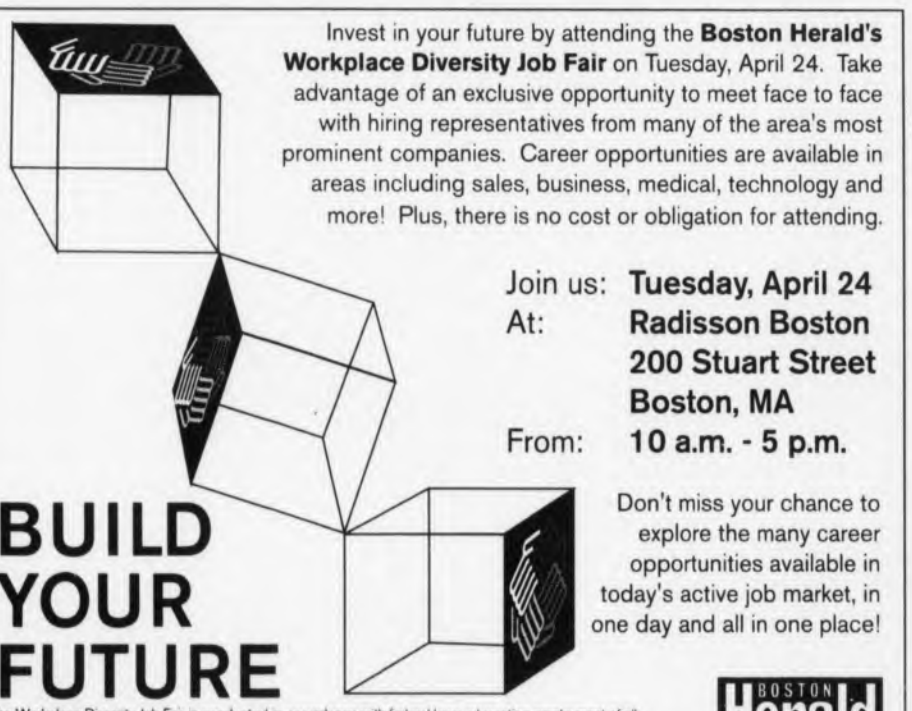
Sam Parker made three first-half saves in the net, while Oliver Brennan — seeing his first-ever action in the goal — came up with two saves in the second half.

With the Blue game over, Cohasset White took the field against Sandwich 2 in a game that was much more closely contested.

The two teams played through a scoreless first quarter before Chris Davis broke the ice early in the second quarter, flipping one past a Sandwich goalie who would stymie Cohasset for most of the day. After Sandwich tied the game, Peter Oswald scored twice, the second on an assist from Jeff Brown, to bring the score to 3-1 at half. Jared Dick's four first-half saves contributed to Sandwich's frustration.



Cohasset dominated the ground ball battle in the third quarter, but couldn't score. Cohasset White's defense— led by Frank Wheelwright, Ryan Kucinski, Kyle Pinkus and Kurt Gritzan— was equal to the challenge, and kept Sandwich out of the scoring column too.



Cohasset broke the game open in the fourth quarter, with goals from Corey Chase, Austen Lanzillotti and another Oswald-from-Brown connection. Justin Hollis made six saves in the second half, with four of them coming during a late Sandwich flurry to help Cohasset close out a 6-2 win.

At the 14-and-Under level, Cohasset dominated a sloppy game against Sandwich, winning 12-6 in a contest that featured goals from a wide number of players. The two teams traded goals through much of the first half before Cohasset was able to take control of the game.

And Cohasset's youngest players, the 10-and-under squad, went to Sandwich for a morning game and also came up a winner, 7-4. Coach Bill Bell noted that while the offense was spread out with many different players picking up goals and assists, the real stars of the game were goaltenders Wes Ulmer and Logan Chase, who kept Sandwich at bay repeatedly and were the backbone of the win.

Cohasset resumes play on Sunday, April 8 at Milliken Field, with all four teams in action. The White team opens the day against Falmouth at noon, followed by the Blue team and the 14- Under team, which play Abington squads at 1:30 and 3 p.m. respectively. The day closes with the 10-year-old team facing Scituate at 4:40 p.m.

Noland defends 'Cohasset Run' title

600 runners shake off inclement weather to finish 'Race By-the-Sea'

Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Kingston's John Noland knew that he'd be facing some harsh conditions during Sunday's 25th Annual Cohasset Road Race By-the-Sea 10K. But it wasn't until the defending champion drove the picturesque route that he realized just how tough the running would be along the most scenic section of the course on Jerusalem Road.

"I got here early and drove the course," said the personable Noland, "and it was windy."

It wasn't a warm zephyr by any means. With the temperatures hovering in the 40s, the stiff breeze that the swollen field of more than 600 runners was guaranteed to face, made for plenty of winter hats, gloves, turtlenecks and sweat pants at the starting line near Cohasset Common.

Noland, though, only felt better as the race went on as he pulled away from a tenacious Jamie Gallagher of Hull to finish ahead of the 610-runner field in 32 minutes, 47 seconds. Gallagher improved dramatically on his 12th-place, 37:41 finish of a year ago, crossing the finish line in front of the town hall in 33:17.

The race, which is sponsored by the Cohasset Rotary Club, is arguably the most scenic on the South Shore and has been recognized by New England Runner magazine as one of the 50 best in the six-state region.

Race director and founder Roy Fitzsimmons was on the course earlier in the day and said the wind along Jerusalem Road had let up at race time.

"I was putting the mile markers out and it was ice cold," said Fitzsimmons. "But it calmed down a bit for the runners."

Fitzsimmons was pleased with the turnout and predicted the field would have been close to 1,000 runners on a clear, warm day. As has been the case in past years, the local businesses stepped up to help sponsor the traditional event. In all, there were 30 businesses that contributed prizes.

"We like to keep the local businesses involved," Fitzsimmons said. "We try to make it the best race we can for the runners and local businesses play a big part in that."

Noland didn't have the luxury of taking in the brilliant view of the Atlantic Ocean as he bucked the cold, blustery wind on Jerusalem Ave., after taking the lead but not breaking clear of Gallagher near the mile mark.

"I was with Gallagher and (fourth-place finisher Richard) Peers for the first three-quarters of a mile and took the lead when the wind died down," said Noland.

After taking the lead on Atlantic Ave., Noland realized just how sluggish he felt. He passed through a slowish 5:21 opening mile "and it felt quick" Noland said later.

Noland may have felt slow but he never tired. As the race wore on, he ran more aggressively, attempting to shake Gallagher who was very much still in the picture. Noland, who finished 25 seconds faster than his 33:12 from last year, continued to pick up the pace, accelerating hard into the winding hills. By the time he reached the 3-mile mark, Noland was well in control with a 20-second lead on Gallagher. At four miles Noland had a 75-yard cushion and felt better than he had the entire race.

"I tried to push the hills and relax a little bit on the flats," he said.

Any hopes Gallagher held out in catching Noland were all but gone when the former Marshfield resident ran the fifth mile in 5:17 (26:25). He continued to pick up the pace, covering the final 1.2-miles of the 6.2-mile race in 6:22.

Whitman's Bob Ruel finished third in 34:30 and Peers, a Plymouth resident, was fourth in 34:46. Cambridge's Elliot Hicks rounded out the top five in 35:27. In all, 11 runners averaged better than a 6-minute-mile pace. Noland wound up running at a 5:18 clip.

Noland, the runner up in 1997 and '98, attributed his lack of zip with the 80-85 miles per week he has been averaging after March. He is currently training for the May 6 Lincoln Marathon in Lincoln, Nebraska. Noland is one of five runners representing the state in the National Guard championships that are being held in conjunction with the marathon. He was planning to run between 80 to 90 miles this week before starting to taper.

"I'll probably run one more race," Noland said, "but for really hard races, this is it."

Some new faces this year at the middle school

TEACHERS WITH CLASS

ELIZABETH OWENS RIGBY

Cohasset Middle School welcomed a new band director, computer teacher, and physical education teacher to the school community this year. Each teacher has brought to C.M.S. additional enthusiasm and experience, as well as a commitment to teaching and learning.

Gregory Lessard is the school's new band director. Lessard graduated with a degree in music education and music performance from the University of Massachusetts in Lowell. He has been a music instructor for many summers at the Joslin Camp for Boys with Diabetes in Charlton, Mass. At this camp he learned that teachers can have a positive influence in the lives of their students, and became inspired to make this kind of a difference for children. Most recently Lessard worked as a private music instructor in the Hingham and Milton Public Schools, where he specialized in the brass instruments, such as trumpet, French horn, trombone, and tuba.

Janet Burzk is the middle school's new computer teacher. Burzk earned a bachelor's degree in business education from Salem State College and a master's degree in education from Suffolk University. She cites her own high school business teacher as the person who inspired her to become a teacher, and maintains communication with her former teacher. Burzk is looking forward to writing a middle-school newspaper with her students and she hopes that it will be a useful tool for communication between the school and the community.

The middle school's physical education teacher is not new to Cohasset, but he is new to its middle school. Torin Sweeney, a six-year veteran staff member at Deer Hill, has moved his classes to Pond Street. Prior to teaching at Deer Hill, he taught physical education at Carver High School for two years. Sweeney has earned both a bachelor's and master's degree and currently he is working toward a certificate of advanced graduate studies in supervision and directorship.

Cohasset Middle School's newest faculty members are looking forward to the changes and opportunities that their new positions bring. The middle school community will benefit from the enthusiasm and experience of these new faculty members.

Elizabeth Owens-Rigby is a member of the Cohasset Teacher's Association.

Children celebrate reading and writing

Dr. Seuss' contribution to reading for children of all ages is celebrated each year in the "Read Across America" Project which was initiated by the National Education Association. Its purpose is to celebrate and promote the importance of literacy.

This year in Cohasset all the students of the Deer Hill School participated in creating their piece of literature modeled on Theodor S. Geisel's, well loved book, "Oh, The Places You'll Go!" Students worked to develop their poems reflecting the form and spirit of this well-known book.

Students of the Deer Hill School were led by the "Cat in the Hat," as portrayed by Tyler Brown, Tim Smith and Christopher Mills accompanied by the Deer Hill Band, playing "Happy Birthday, Dr. Seuss. Upon their arrival at the Joseph Osgood School, the students will share their original works with the younger children in the Stephen Hart Library. The Cohasset Teacher Association kindly sponsored the purchase of the Cat in the Hat costume and bookmarks for each student to enrich the festivities.

Here are some selected student poems:

Oh, the Places Words Can Take You!

By: Kacy Litchfield and Colleen Richardson

Oh, the places words can take us,
Whether we ride in a train or a bus.
Where the Snozle-Bulloos and the Zonk-birds are,
And the Dally-Wonkles drive by in a car.
It doesn't matter at all where you're from,
Whether you sing, or just join us and hum.
A place where nutty Earaskers will come,
Along with the birds that go twid-dly-dum.
Where do you wish to visit today,
Shall it be France or near Buzzard's Bay!

Oh the Places Words Can Go

By: Siobhan Fludder

Oh the places words can go,
They can go fast or slow,
They can go high or low,
Or take you to a Broadway show.
With words you can do anything,
You can talk or you can sing,
Words are always imagination,
They have all kinds of creation.
Words can be yellow purple or pink,
Words can always make you thinly,
Ride a bus or take the train,
Words can sometimes be insane.
Words can sometimes even rhyme,
All you do is take a step at a time,
You can fly high in the sky,
Everyone likes words, even I,
So when you write a story or read a book,
Go inside and take a look,
Always remember what I said,
Let every word stick in your head.

Words

By: Brian Hill, Dave Snowdale, Chris Mercurio

Words can take you many places,
Maybe you will meet some famous faces.
Maybe you will start at military bases,
And win card games with all the aces.
Maybe to a magical land,
and you will join a Marching band.
You will play the drums,
and eat all the plums.
So many things to do today,
so go ahead and get on the way.
But wait there is more,
so walk through this door,
Or stay here and be a bore.
I choose to do more,
there is more to do,
then to stay here and snore.
I am going to the moon,
so come again I will see you soon.

Around the World With Words

By Steph Fewsmith

Words can take you across the land,
To places where life is grand,
You turn into a golden bird
And you're in China, with just one word,
Now to Poland, then to Russia,
Where an avalanche is bound to crush ya,
A tiger pounces, but you escape,
Then you end up in the Cape
In the Cape of Good Hope,
You lasso a rhino with a rope,
He flings you high into the air,
Into the arms of a grizzly bear,
Now you're in Yellowstone National Park,
But you'd better head home; it's getting dark,
A day of adventure, but now you're done,
Didn't you have lots of fun?

Words Can Take You Anywhere

By: Elizabeth Fegreus & EmilyRuney

I started at home reading in my room,
When all of a sudden, I heard a "Kaboom!"
I opened my eyes and what did I see?
I was floating down the Mississippi.
Still reading my book and it was almost dawn,
I was still climbing trees in the Amazon.
Next, I found myself running for my life,
From a pirate chasing me with a knife!
Then there I was safe and snug in my bed,
Asleep, at last, with a pillow under my head.

New officer comes on board

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset's newest police officer may already may look familiar to some residents.

James McLean, 32, and a Norwood native, was hired by the town as part of its federal COPS grant and is filling the first new officer position created in 20 years. But he is already somewhat acquainted with Cohasset streets – he has been a part-time officer in town since 1995.

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said McLean first came to Cohasset in 1995 as one of the two officers the town hires during the summer for beach and bike patrols. When McLean passed the civil service exam in 1996, the town hired him as a permanent intermittent officer.

Because he has already passed the civil service exam, and has been to the police academy, McLean will be able to start in town immediately, and save Cohasset $15,000 that would have been spent paying him to go to the academy. Also, because he is able to fill shifts right away, the town will save money in overtime costs.

Noonan had to ask the Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council for an exemption because McLean went to the Florida police academy, but said he expects it to be granted.

In February, the town was notified it had received $75,000 in a federal grant, that will cover 75 percent of his salary next year, 50 percent the following year and 25 percent the year after that. Starting pay for police officers in town is $751 a week.

James McLean has joined the Cohasset police force.

McLean graduated from Norwood High School in 1987, and has an associate's degree from Massasoit Community College. He has also served with the Boston Municipal Police, patrolling city-owned housing areas, for the past four years.

The hiring comes at a good time for the department, which finds itself shorthanded. Three officers are out on disability leave, and are not expected back anytime soon.

POLICE BRIEFS

Vandalism found

Police are investigating vandalism at Wheelwright Farm condominiums that caused about $250 in damage. Responding to a report from one of the residents of the condominium complex off Beechwood Street, police discovered several incidences of graffiti that included obscenities spray painted on the large stone at the entranceway, on a large rock and on the 20 mph speed limit sign along the driveway.

Marijuana arrest

A police cruiser had to swerve to avoid being hit by a pickup truck travelling in excess of 60 mph in the opposite direction on Forest Avenue at about 10 p.m. last Friday night, police said.

The cruiser reversed direction, activated its emergency lights and siren and pursued the suspect for about a mile, who was later identified as Patrick Bowes, Jr., 24 of 24 Woodland Road, Scituate, police said

According to the police report, Bowes allegedly accelerated and finally stopped after getting caught up in traffic. Further investigation revealed Bowes had a plastic bag of what is believed to be marijuana on his person.

Bowes was charged with illegal possession of a Class D substance (marijuana), operating a motor vehicle negligently as to endanger, failure to stop for a police officer, speeding, and failure to stay within marked lanes and was cited for an expired inspection sticker.

Bowes was arraigned on the charges Monday in Quincy District Court and was released on the promise to appear May 16 for a pretrial conference, Sgt., Robert Jackson said.

Arrest for OUI after accident

Police arrested Tammy Callahan, 40, of 11 Harborview Road, Hull for operating under the influence of alcohol following a single-car accident Saturday night.

At about 7:30 p.m., police were dispatched to Cedar Street near the Cohasset Golf Club, and saw a motor vehicle that had hit a tree head-on. Injured in the crash was the passenger, a 40-year-old man, who had a bloody face but refused to be taken to the hospital, police said. Firefighters treated him for cuts to his head and left hand at the scene. Callahan, who said she was wearing a seatbelt, said a dog ran out in front of the car and caused the crash.

Callahan was charged with operating under the influence of liquor (third or subsequent offense) and failure to stay within marked lane. The passenger was cited for not wearing a seat belt.

Callahan posted $500 cash bail after her arraignment Monday in Quincy District Court to ensure that she appear at a pretrial conference May 16, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

WORSHIP NOTES

Holy week at St. Stephen's Church

Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave. begins the celebration of Holy Week with the Blessing of Palms on Palm Sunday, April 8 at both the 8 and 10 a.m. services. Morning Prayer will be offered in the chapel at 6:30 a.m. every day during Holy Week.

Wednesday in Holy Week is marked by a celebration of the Holy Eucharist at 9:30 a.m. with Bible Study following. At the worship there will be a prayer for healing. Evening Prayer will be offered at 5:30 p.m. with prayers for peace in the world.

A 24 hour Prayer Watch begins on Maundy Thursday, April 12, at 3 p.m. Worshipers sign up for an hour throughout the day to be in church to read, pray, just to be quiet, or meditate. This time at prayer recalls Jesus' words at Gethsemane, "So, could you not watch with me one hour?" and the words of Psalm 130: "my soul waits for the Lord more than those who watch for the morning, more than those who watch for the morning." At 7:30 p.m. on Maundy Thursday the Holy Eucharist will be celebrated commemorating the Last Supper. Following the Eucharist worshipers will gather for a simple meal of foods typical of Jesus' place and time - breads, cheese, olives, nuts, fruits, and milk and honey. This shared meal accents the importance of community and fellowship for the church's life together in Christ.

Good Friday worship begins at noon on April 13, with an hour of quiet. The Service of the Word and Solemn Collects begins at 1 p.m. A special service for children takes place at 2:30 p.m. and ends the traditional three hours of worship while Jesus was on the cross.

Children will gather the next day on Saturday, April 14 at 2:30 p.m. in the church courtyard for an Easter egg hunt, a playful way to enter into the joy of Christ's resurrection. The Great Vigil of Easter candlelight worship will begin Saturday at 7:30 p.m. The worship is dramatic beginning with the church in darkness. Candles are lit and at the moment when the resurrection is proclaimed the church is ablaze with light signifying that the resurrected Jesus is the light that leads the world out of darkness.

Easter morning, Sunday, April 15, the story is told of the women coming to the tomb where Jesus' body had been placed and finding it empty. The worship begins with the words "Christ is risen." Services are at 8 and 10 a.m. Music for 8 a.m. worship will be organ and brass with a vocal quartet. At 10 a.m. there will be full choir with organ and brass. Both services will be a celebration of Holy Eucharist with sermon.

Jazzing it up

Donna Byrne delights at benefit concert

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

A modern jazz concert in the setting of a 19th century Unitarian country church seems like a collision of two American eras, if not two worlds.

Or it just may be a sign of the times.

But count on Donna Byrne and her quartet to rise to the occasion. Amid the echoing surroundings of Duxbury's First Parish Church Sunday, the Norwell jazz vocalist and her band of well-traveled players were able to deliver a swinging and well-finessed set as spirited as a festival spot at Newport.

The matinee concert was also a benefit for The American Liver Foundation, on behalf of Duxbury resident Pamela Campbell Smith, a South Shore architect who for the past four years has run in numerous marathon events, including Boston, New York and London, to raise money for the ALF. Smith was one of numerous friends and past clients of Byrne among the 60-odd listeners in the audience on Sunday, as the singer herself acknowledged, "I've probably written out checks in the past to eighty percent of the people here today."

Byrne is currently fresh off the release of her most recent CD, Don't Dream of Anybody But Me, a typically fine set of jazz-vocal standards of both the traditional and modern eras featuring solid, well-rooted playing from such supporters as the singer's original mentor, Boston pianist Dave McKenna, and Byrne's husband, bassist Marshall Wood, as well as the singer's own elegant and energetic vocals. The disc is Byrne's fifth as a solo artist, all of which are released on hers and Wood's homegrown Ol' Socks Records label.

But the singer's on-disc representation may soon change, as the day following the Duxbury concert Byrne flew off to New York to talk a possible contract deal with a national jazz label which she and Wood don't wish to reveal at the present time.

Donna Byrne just released her fifth CD on her own label Ol' Socks Records. But a trip this week to New York could give the Norwell Jazz vocalist a contract on a national jazz label.

Wood is also the regular bassist in Byrne's live-show band, and was in tow once again for Sunday's benefit date. Other band members included tenor saxophonist and clarinetist Mike Monaghan, pianist Paul Schmeling and drummer Jim Gwin. All of the players are veteran performers of the Boston and national jazz and music scenes who have graced the stage with acts from Rebecca Parris and area saxophonist Dick Johnson to the Boston Pops, Tony Bennett, Dizzy Gillespie, James Taylor and Mary Chapin Carpenter.

Norwell Jazz vocalist Donna Byrne gets around. Here, she performs with the Dick Johnson Big Band at an event held last April at the Abington Library.

Byrne and her combo demonstrated their versatility from the earliest moments of their set, opening with an up tempo, booming upright-bass arrangement of the standard "You and the Night and the Music," followed by the singer's gentle a cappella lead-in on Harold Arlen's "A Sleepin' Bee" and the rollicking swing of Irving Berlin's "Always." The group continued to shift musical moods with natural ease, moving from a serene, piano-led take on the Hoagy Carmicheal/Johnny Mercer ballad, "Skylark," to an exuberant rendition of Antonio Carlo Jobim's "Somewhere In the Hills," which was also a strong showcase for Byrne's bedazzling, register-jumping vocal skills.

Byrne was also her usual good-humored, personable self with the audience, previewing one song with the quip, "If men and women could truly get along and understand each other, we'd probably only have about four songs to sing."

She also recollected the pivotal past event that made her, at age 26, finally take the serious plunge into a music career — the death of her father, for whom she had only sung previously.

Other set highlights included a hot-and-cool trilogy of Duke Ellington tunes, "It Don't Mean a Thing (If It Ain't Got That Swing)," "In a Sentimental Mood" and "Ain't Got Nothin' But the Blues." Also, a semi-homage to Ella Fitzgerald "Someone To Watch Over Me," a walking-bass reinvention of Johnny Mercer's "Fools Rush In," and the audience-request section climax "Green Dolphin Street."

In a fitting gesture to the show's sponsor, Byrne invited Smith on the bandstand to join in a duet on the set-closing number, the shuffling, mawkish but likable ode to friendship "Side By Side."

Jazz vocalist Donna Byrne is joined by her friend Pamela Campbell Smith in a rendition of "Side by Side" to wrap up a benefit concert for the American Liver Foundation Sunday. The concert performance was held at Duxbury's First Parish Church.

What's an intimate show like 'Rent' doing in a theater like the Wang?

By Alexander Stevens
ARTS WRITER

When "Rent" first opened, it played at the 188-seat New York Theatre Workshop. After it became a hit, it moved over to the 1,200-seat Nederlander. When "Rent" later embarked on its first road tour, it played at the 1,600-seat Shubert Theatre in Boston.

But when the musical returns to Boston next week, it will play at the 3,600-seat Wang Theatre.

There's a trend here. And it's not a good one.

It's important to note that I like "Rent." It's one of my favorite musicals. But it's playing in the wrong theater. "Rent" belongs at the Shubert for a month, not the Wang for a week.

In order to understand how ill-advised it is to bring a show that was hatched at a 188-seat theater into one that's about 20 times that size, consider the mood and story line of "Rent." The show follows a clutch of outcast New York City Bohemians, living hand-to-mouth, staving off hunger and disease. They heat their apartment with an illegal, makeshift stove, tap other electric sources with long extension cords, and live by candlelight when the power blows.

The real problem is a matter of scale. "Rent" will get lost in the cavernous Wang.

But it's not just that the opulence of the Wang contradicts the tone of "Rent." The real problem is a matter of scale. "Rent" will get lost in the cavernous Wang.

This is not just mere speculation. I saw "Rent" from the nose-bleed seats when it played the 3,200-seat Performing Arts Center in Providence. It wasn't pretty. The musical was thwarted. The energy was lost. The actors were specks. Their plight was distant. The impact was blunted.

You can't feel "Rent" when you can barely see it. The assault of the show, which is built on walls of music, was dulled. And the rock score plays best when you're so close you can feel the thump of the bass against your chest.

That's what the poor souls lost in the balcony of the Wang Theatre are going to experience, or rather not experience, April 10-15.

It's all the more frustrating, because the keeper of the "Rent" flame is no longer with us. Writer-composer Jonathan Larson died the day before his show opened. At every step in the process, creative people involved with "Rent" have maintained that they've been looking out for the best interest of Larson. And, indeed, the producers are committed to selling $20 "rush" tickets (great seats) at every show. That's a nod to the roots of the show, to Larson's desire to make theater available to people of modest means. Too bad that kind of integrity isn't reflected in this choice of venue.

"Rent" perhaps, won't be saved until it can no longer draw a crowd. One day, it will close in New York and the road tours will dry up (currently only one road show remains). At a certain point, the rights will become available to other producers. And I'll respect the one who finds a ramshackle little theater some place that seats about 250 — a theater where there's a chance that when Roger hits the high notes in "Glory" or when the entire cast pounds out "Rent," a rafter might fall. The stage should creak, actors should be in the audience's lap, and the music should be so loud it hurts. Then "Rent" may recapture its zing, its relevance, its edgy energy.

Until then, producers must remember that presenting a show isn't just about finding the biggest payday. They have a responsibility to match the show with a theater that's right for it. Producers should be making artistic decisions as well as financial ones. It's about making venue choices that honor Jonathan Larson, honor the actors and honor the audience who buys the tickets.

"Rent" plays April 10-15 at the Wang Theatre, in Boston. Tickets are $35-$65. Call (800) 447-7400.

Simplifying leg of lamb

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Leg of lamb is not America's favorite holiday roast. Many folks object to its assertive flavor and many cooks roast the leg bone-in, which makes for both tricky carving and meat that is unevenly cooked. My goal was to take a fresh look at lamb, seeing if I could resurrect its public image, making it both simpler to prepare and better in flavor.

The first issue was the type of lamb. You can buy lamb from New Zealand, Australia, Iceland, or the United States. (The country of origin is indicated on the outside of the package.) A tasting performed in the test kitchen at Cook's Illustrated found that the strongest lamb came from Australia followed by New Zealand, America, and then Iceland, the latter having such a delicate flavor that it was jokingly referred to by tasters as "lamb lite." Although many factors impact flavor, the age of the animal is the most important. The Australian lamb was clearly the oldest of the lot and the Icelandic product clearly came from a very young animal. (The leg was much smaller.) Since American lamb is the most common supermarket offering, you will most likely be serving a relatively mild roast lamb, but if you want almost no lamb flavor whatsoever, go for the Icelandic.

The next question was what portion of the leg is best. A whole leg of lamb will run 8 to 10 pounds, which is too much meat for most dinners and also takes a long time to cook. So I decided to use only a half leg. You have a choice: you can use either the sirloin half (the upper half) or the shank half (the lower half). I tested the recipe using both and found the sirloin half to have two benefits. First, the meat is more tender. Second, the sirloin half is more even in thickness (the shank narrows considerably towards the end), which makes for more even cooking and easier tying. (Be advised, however, that the sirloin end is harder to find than the shank.)

The next question was boning. Bone-in legs are almost impossible to carve so I went with a boneless leg. Having boned many legs before, I knew that this is beyond the patience level and skill of most home cooks, so just ask your butcher to do it for you. I would ask them to remove as much fat as possible from the leg since the fat contains much of the strong flavor which some of us find objectionable. I also tried boneless legs sold in the vacuum-sealed bags and I wasn't crazy about them – they seemed less than fresh and rather slimy to the touch. (For a half leg, the bone weighs about a pound, so order a 4 1/2 pound leg bone-in if you want 3 1/2 pounds boneless, the amount called for in the following recipe.) Finally, ask your butcher to butterfly the leg so that it is of an even thickness.

The next issue was seasonings since a leg roasted with only salt and pepper lacked flavor. Using a base of olive oil, salt, pepper, and some chopped garlic, I experimented with thyme, rosemary, parsley, sage, mint, and oregano. Oregano and sage were overpowering. Mint was tasty but develops a bitter taste if cooked too much, which easily happens at the exposed ends of the roast. Thyme and rosemary were winners for their complementary flavors and parsley added a fresh taste. I also tried toasted pine nuts, Parmesan cheese, and anchovies, but was not crazy about any of them with the herbs. Next, I tried Indian spices but they were a bit overpowering so I settled on thyme, parsley, rosemary, and garlic as my flavoring agents.

The herb mixture is spread on the inside of the roast and then the meat is rolled back into shape and tied with twine. Butchers use a variety of slipknots but you can use any knot you like. Just make sure to tie one loop around the ends of the roast lengthwise to keep things in shape as it cooks. I tried browning the roast on top of the stove before roasting but I found no major benefits. I then tested oven temperatures and settled on 375 degrees; lamb cannot be roasted in a low oven since it turns mushy, and higher heat simply overcooks the exterior before the interior is ready. If you need to serve a crowd, I would opt for two half legs, which will cook faster than a whole leg.

ROAST BONELESS LEG OF LAMB WITH HERB STUFFING

Preparing the leg before roasting is important. Ask the butcher to bone the half-leg (sirloin end preferred), trim off as much fat as possible, and butterfly the meat so that it is of an even thickness. When you get the roast home, untie it, and make sure that he or she has done their job, trimming fat if necessary. If the roast is not of an even thickness, place it between sheets of waxed paper and, using the bottom of a heavy saucepan or a meat pounder, whack the thicker parts until they thin out. You will also need 2 yards of twine for this recipe and an instant-read thermometer is quite helpful.

1 3 1/2 to 4 pound boneless half leg of lamb, sirloin half preferred
3 tablespoons best quality olive oil
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
1 medium clove garlic, finely minced
2 tablespoons fresh parsley leaves, minced
1 tablespoon fresh rosemary, minced
1 tablespoon fresh thyme, minced

1. Heat the oven to 375 degrees and adjust a rack to the lower middle position. Have ready a roasting rack placed inside a roasting pan.

2 Unroll the lamb and lay it on a cutting board with the outside or fatty side facing up. Trim off any thick surface fat. Flip the roast so the rough or interior side is facing up. If the meat is not of an even thickness, "butterfly" the thickest part by cutting most of the way through this part horizontally and then opening it up like a flap. (Or, cover with waxed paper and pound it with a heavy saucepan.) Rub the exposed surface with 1 1/2 tablespoons of the olive oil. Season liberally with salt and pepper and the chopped garlic and herbs. Roll (start with a long side) the roast onto itself to re-assemble the leg. Starting at the thick end, tie the roast with the twine at 1 inch intervals. Tie one loop around the ends along the length of the roast. Rub the outside with the remaining 1 1/2 tablespoons olive oil and season liberally with salt and pepper.

3. Place the roast on the rack and into the heated oven. Cook for 45 to 60 minutes or until an instant-read thermometer inserted into the thickest part reads 135 degrees for a medium-rare roast. (For medium, roast to 140 to 145 degrees.) Let rest for 10 minutes on a cutting board, tented with foil. Slice and serve.

It's time to sow and grow seeds

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As our daylight hours gradually lengthen and temperatures moderate, our gardens and landscapes begin to awaken from their long winter's rest. Cheerful, brightly colored spring bulbs push their way up through the soft, moist earth, beckoned forth by the sun's warming rays and the spirited melodies of courting birds. The leaf and flower buds on many of our trees and shrubs have started to swell and dormant perennials are beginning to emerge, stretching and yawning as they greet each new day. Despite the prediction for more inclement weather and the promise of additional flooding in low areas, spring is in the air and a gardener's fancy turns to working the soil and nurturing plants. Should dreary weather and soggy soils hamper your spring cleaning efforts outside, sowing seeds indoors may offer a pleasant and rewarding substitute for yard work and may temporarily satisfy your irrepressible urge to cultivate the soil.

Once the essential supplies for starting seeds have been acquired, including containers, seed packets, liquid-soluble fertilizer and sterile growing medium, time should be taken to carefully read the instructions on the back of the seed packets. Reference books and catalogs may offer valuable information on how to treat seeds which may have been gathered from your own garden or provide supplemental information to that listed on the packet. Many seeds have special requirements which must be followed to ensure reliable germination.

Nature devises many clever ways to optimize the success and survival of plants. Methods and timing of seed dispersal and internal mechanisms which delay sprouting of those seeds until growing conditions are optimal, are magically orchestrated to ensure maximal rates of germination in the wild. Many perennials and woody plants which are native to cold and sometimes harsh environments like New England, produce seeds with protective seed coats, which require a period of external influences to ensure spring germination. Were these seeds to require only moisture, they might sprout prematurely and the tender seedlings would most likely succumb to winter chills. To sow and grow these seeds, special steps must be taken to hasten nature's winter-long process. Two commonly practiced methods of seed treatment are known as scarification and stratification.

Scarification is the act of penetrating a seed coat. In nature, a tough outer seed coat might be broken down by the digestive tract of birds or animals. In the soil, microorganisms or the elements of the soil would gradually wear away or soften this outer layer enabling seeds to sprout at an appropriate time. To artificially produce these environmental factors, it is necessary to nick and/or soak these seeds.

Larger seeds with hard outer coats can be nicked with a fingernail file, razor blade or pocket-knife taking care not to slice into the embryo underneath the covering. Gently rub smaller seeds between two pieces of sandpaper. Penetrating the seed coats will enable moisture to reach the embryo and initiate the germination process. Some types of seeds are best soaked in warm water for a minimum of 24 hours to soften the seed coat, including peas, beans, carrots, corn, beets and spinach. Scarify parsley, false indigo (Baptisia), primroses, and mallows (Hibiscus). Lupines, morning glories and sweet peas (Lathyrus) are best treated by both means of scarification.

In our northern gardens and the wild, seeds are dispersed throughout the growing season. During the fall and winter months, these tiny miracles are covered by leaf litter, debris or soil and subjected to periods of cold and dampness. Many of these seeds require chilling moisture in order to germinate, a process known as stratification. While all seeds should be stored in a cool, dark location, an additional period of moist chilling just prior to sowing may be necessary. Large seeds, like the shiny black beauties produced by daylilies, can be collected, dried and stored in plastic zipper bags in the refrigerator. Moist seed-growing medium or vermiculite can then be added to the bags for a period of five to six weeks prior to sowing them in flats. For smaller seeds, sow directly in flats, cover with plastic or glass and place in a refrigerator, unheated garage, cold frame or directly in the ground in a protected area. Other seeds which require stratification include bleeding heart, aster, bachelor buttons, bee balm, hellebore, columbine, lavender, ornamental cabbage, tall phlox, some primroses, violets, pansies, purple coneflower, delphinium, snapdragons, black-eyed Susan and cleome. Many of these only require two or three weeks of cold, so your entire refrigerator does not need to be transformed into a garden plot and successive sowings could be done. Woody plants tend to require longer chilling time intervals than annuals or perennials. Transfer the flats to a warm, sunny location following this period of stratification and watch the miracle unfold.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, APRIL 5

This day has its ups and downs. A positive attitude is your ace in the hole. Don't allow minor setbacks to throw you off course. The moon continues to travel in detail-oriented Virgo all day. Instead of starting new projects, finish old business, review and redo. A rough spot is in effect between 2:39-5:39 p.m., when the moon aligns with Pluto. Sidestep fear, doubts, worries. Get back on track with diets, exercise regimens. Take better care of yourself.

FRIDAY, APRIL 6

The planet Mercury moves into Aries at 3:14 a.m., remaining there until April 21. A Virgo moon prompts you to stay busy with practical projects. Tackle jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. Clean out desk drawers and closets. Handle routine chores and errands. You can be most productive. At 2:18 p.m. the Virgo moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. The final windup to the full moon begins at 4:57 p.m., when the moon enters Libra. People often have difficulty sleeping in full moon periods. It's okay to work or party late into the evening.

SATURDAY, APRIL 7

Gear up for a hectic day. The full moon continues to build until 11:22 p.m., when it culminates at 18 1/2-degrees of Libra. Enthusiasm and emotions run high. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can get them out of the way in short time. This is a wonderful day and evening for social activities, impromptu get-togethers, romantic adventures. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SUNDAY, APRIL 8

Intensive planetary action begins to wind down, and the stage is set for a pleasant morning. The Libra moon forms harmonious contacts to Mars and Uranus until 8:30 a.m., when it becomes inactive. Mercury and Venus conjoin at 11:25 a.m., 4-degrees Libra. This combination of influences may help you to express feelings you usually cannot. At 7:01 p.m. the moon enters Scorpio. Plan a quiet evening.

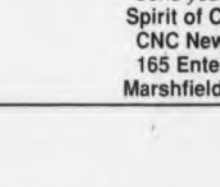
MONDAY, APRIL 9

A lunar alignment to Neptune can make for a slow start this morning. This influence passes over by 10:39 a.m., however, and the remainder of the day rates high for getting things done. Take on a full agenda. You can be extremely productive. The combination of a Scorpio moon and applying Mars/Uranus alignment urges you to channel energy constructively. Tackle jobs that require physical labor and exertion. You can also make gains with projects that need troubleshooting, problem-solving.

TUESDAY, APRIL 10

This is a day that can go either way. Avoid rigid time schedules; don't take on more than you can handle. The Scorpio moon forms challenging alignments to Uranus at 12:44 p.m. and Saturn at 9:43 p.m., when it becomes inactive. On the other hand, Mars forms a harmonious contact to Uranus in the morning; Mercury aligns with Neptune in the evening. Creativity is highlighted; focus on jobs that need to be redone, repaired. Follow your intuition. At 11:47 p.m. the moon enters Sagittarius.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11



Get an early start to this day. Influences this morning are most favorable for new beginnings in your business and personal life. Go for the gold. Sign contracts, promote ideas, launch important ventures before 10:13 a.m., when Mercury forms a harmonious contact to Jupiter. The moon travels in exuberant Sagittarius, interacting with Venus, Neptune, Jupiter and Mercury. Be sure to take extra time out for fun and games.

THURSDAY, APRIL 12

Energy and enthusiasm continue to run high today. People are cheerful, talkative. New starts are recommended. The Sagittarius moon interacts with the sun and Uranus, prompting you to be more spontaneous, open-minded. Explore new ideas and set new goals. The moon becomes inactive at 9:56 p.m., when it aligns with Mars. Slow down in this period. Use common sense; don't take risks.

Group 'AfTA' MBTA files

Seeks recent Greenbush records

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

An anti-train group has launched the first of what it promises to be several lawsuits against the Greenbush project.

Tuesday in Suffolk Superior Court, Advocates for Transportation Alternatives — known as AfTA — filed suit against the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority and two other state agencies for "repeated failure to comply with public records requests," according to AfTA president John Bewick, a Hingham resident.

Bewick, who served as state Secretary of Environmental Affairs in the early 1980s under Gov. Ed King, said AfTA has made a blanket request for all Greenbush documents since last summer and those relating to the public/private partnership for building the railroad line. (State

Three votes give Martin victory over MacCarthy

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

At the very least, Adrienne MacCarthy will be able to use her 2001 School Committee race as a civics lesson.

"I've had a number of people come up to me and say 'I'm sorry I forgot to vote.' We should have realized it from the presidential election, and now we'll realize it from our small town election, that we need to get out and vote," she said.

The Doane Street resident came up three votes shy in the initial ballot count at this past Saturday's Town Election.

"Your one vote does matter," MacCarthy said.

Out of the town's 5,358 registered voters, just 1, 816 came out to vote – a 34 percent turnout.

In the three-way race for the two school committee seats, MacCarthy was edged out by current committee chairman Pat Martin, 960 votes to 957 votes. Incumbent school committee member Mark DeGiacomo received 1,077 votes.

MacCarthy has taken out the papers needed to request a recount, and plans to file them by the April 17 deadline. Town Clerk Marion Douglas then has 10 days to set a date for the official recount. MacCarthy called the election results "exciting"

Teens host computer workshop for senior citizens

By Mary Ford

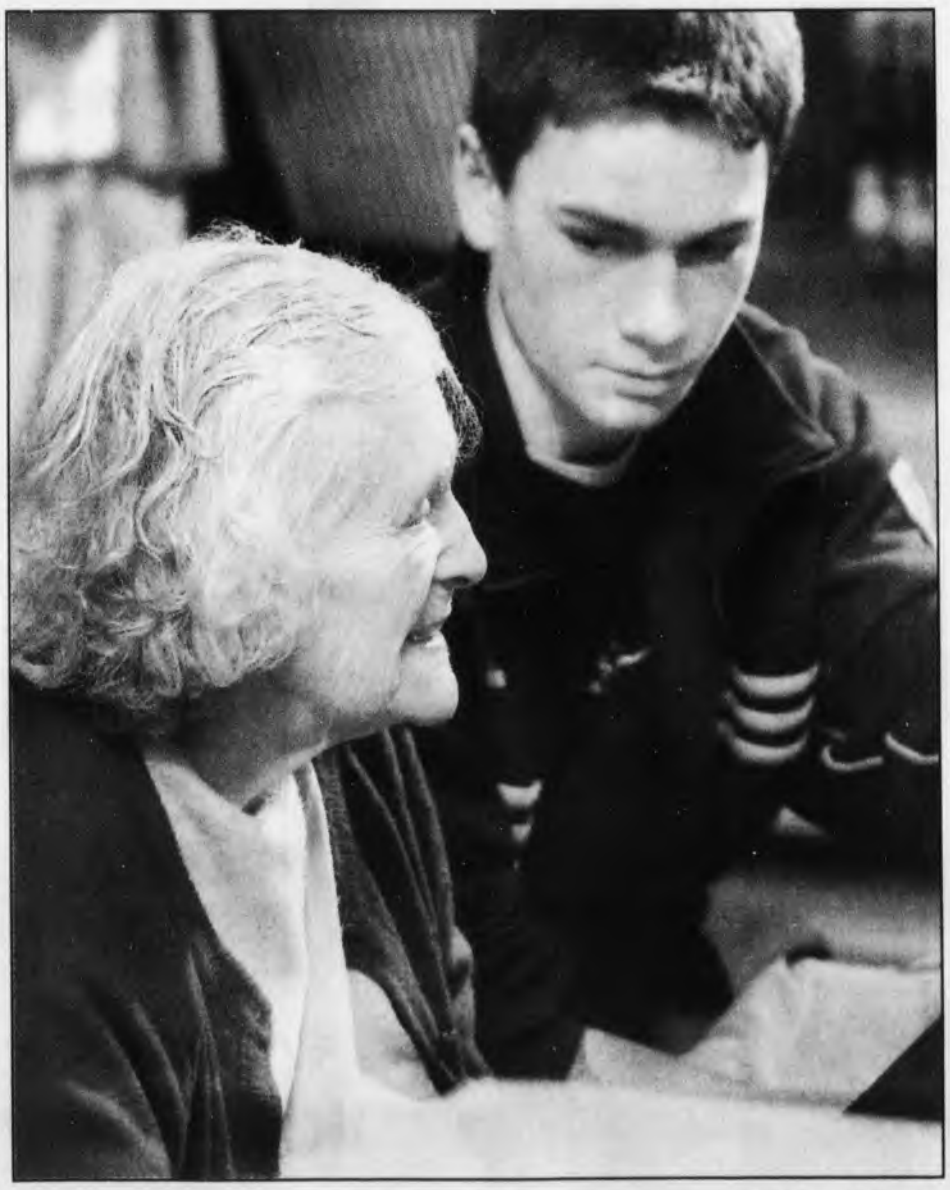
Although Althea Stamp still uses the old-fashioned phrase "letter writing" — what she's really doing is sending e-mails to her daughter in Canada.

Communicating electronically may sound pretty routine to most of us — but to Stamp, 85, computers are still newfangled devices.

"So many seniors are scared stiff, they don't want to know about it," she says.



"I know it's a cliché — but it's a sight to behold."
—Paul Narkiewicz, honor society advisor

But thanks to members of the National Honor Society at the high school, local senior citizens are getting hands-on instruction every Wednesday afternoon on the computers in the school library.

The intergenerational project was the brainchild of society president Casey Brewer, who approached the Council on Elder Affairs about the idea and got an enthusiastic response.

"I know it's a cliché — but it's a sight to behold," says honor society advisor Paul Narkiewicz, about the classes. "The enthusi-

Preservation act, override get nod

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Residents voted to put a little extra in town coffers by approving a $300,000 Proposition 2 fi override and adopting the Community Preservation Act at Saturday's election.

The override — needed, thanks to a $200,000 increase in health insurance costs for town employees, and unexpected overruns in the town's legal expense and police overtimes budgets — passed by a vote of 951 to 819.

The override will tack an extra 22 cents per $1,000 onto the tax rate. For a house valued at $400,000, that will mean an extra $105 on the tax bill.

The Community Preservation Act will add a 1 fi percent surcharge onto the property tax bill. for five years. The act passed with a 998 to 756 vote margin.

Money raised from the surcharge will be put into a trust fund for the town to pay for open space purchases, renovation work to historic properties and community housing. The money will also be eligible for a matching grant from the state.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the surcharge will add 15 more cents onto the tax rate, and cost the owner of $400,000 home an extra $70 a year. The first $100,000 of a property's value will be excluded. The town expects to raise $200,000 a year from the surcharge.

Because the town entered into the state land bank in its first year, it is guaranteed to receive a 100 percent state match of the funds the town raises as of June 30, 2002. The grant will be paid by the state, to the town, on Oct. 15. In the following years, Cohasset will received between a 5 and 100 percent matching grant, depending on how many Massachusetts communities enter into the land bank.

With both the override and surcharge figured in, the property taxes for a house valued at $400,000 is estimated to increase from $5,836 in fiscal year 2001 to $6,372 in fiscal year 2002.

Haddad said residents will see the increase starting on their July tax bill.

The property taxes for a $400,000 house are estimated to increase from $5,836 in fiscal year 2001 to $6,372 in fiscal year 2002.

Opposition to the questions had been lacking in weeks leading up to the election. The Mariner received no letters concerning the override at all, and received many letters backing the preservation act in the weeks leading up to Saturday's election.

Leonora Jenkins of Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers said her group had posted signs in different locations around town, but wasn't able to get people to stand outside Town Hall Saturday with anti-override signs.

She said "a lot of people are amazed that the override passed" and didn't think people, who voted in favor of the preservation act, "understood what they voted for."

"They argued that a new house will cost the town $1.16 in services for each $1 in tax revenue, and

This week in COHASSET

Remove wreaths

Winter wreaths and baskets must be removed from all town-owned cemeteries by April 15.

Clarification

At the March 31 Town Meeting, a two-thirds majority vote gave the town Water Commission authorization to take the parcel of land known as the 'wolf pits' by eminent domain.

The Water Commission argued that any development on the property, which is in the Lily Pond watershed area, would adversely affect the town's drinking water supply.

Town Meeting authorized the Water Commission to offer $150,000 for the land, but once the land taking is issued, and the owners bring the matter to court, the town is on the hook for whatever price tag a judge may determine it is worth, officials said.

The property is owned by developer Wayne Sawchuk, of Beechwood Street, and Leland and Leonora Jenkins of Jerusalem Road.

RTF holiday hours

The Recycling Transfer Facility will be closed, Sunday, April 15, in observance of the Easter Holiday. It will open, Tuesday, April 17.

Storm aid

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen Tuesday night that the town will receive $15,000 from the Federal Emergency Management Agency for costs incurred during the March 6 nor'easter.

Although the town didn't receive much snow, it did get nailed with a strong tidal surge that caused a stretch of Atlantic Avenue to be closed. It also spent thousands of dollars in overtime for police, fire, and department of public works employees, as well as for extra salt and sand.

This winter, the town went over its snow and ice removal budget by close to $60,000.

Library week

Selectmen declared the week of April 8 to 14 as National Library Week. Part of a nation-wide celebration, National Library Week honors "the vital role of libraries and librarians in this town."

As part of the week, free computer software is available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Liquor license

Selectmen granted a one-day liquor license to the South Shore Community Center for a function on May 16.

Trash grant

On Tuesday night, selectmen formally accepted a $91,000 grant from the Massachusetts Technology Waste Park. The money will be used to offset trash hauling costs as SEMASS.

Voters thanked

Three days after Town Election, Selectmen Thomas Callahan and Merle Brown thanked voters for putting them back on the board for the next three years.

Brown said the election showed the voters confidence in him for the next three years. Callahan also thanked the town for entering into the Community Preservation Act.

Temporary registrar

In case a recount is held within the next week, selectmen named Carol St. Pierre as a temporary registrar for Margaret Charles, a Democrat, who will be on vacation. St. Pierre is also a Democrat.

The vote by selectmen was only 3-0. Both Chairman Fred Koed and Merle Brown abstained from voting because their names appeared in an advertisement endorsing one of the school committee candidates.

Eyeglasses wanted

Strecker Eye Center will have a used eyeglass collection during April and May to benefit the Lions Club.

Please drop off your old eyeglasses at out location at Shaw's Plaza in Cohasset. If you have any questions please call 781-383-2555.

Water-rate hike

The Massachusetts Department of Telecommunications and Energy is still soliciting public comment on the proposed rate increase filed by the Massachusetts-American Water Co.

Massachusetts-American, which provides water service in Hull, Hingham and North Cohasset, is seeking to raise rates by 16 percent, or nearly $100 per year for the average residential customer.

State regulators have delayed the effective date of any increase until Aug. 1, and DTE officials have said that public comments can be submitted at any time during the hearing process.

Ratepayers, residents, and other interested parties are encouraged to register their opinions by e-mail at dte.efiling@state.ma.us or to send written comments to:

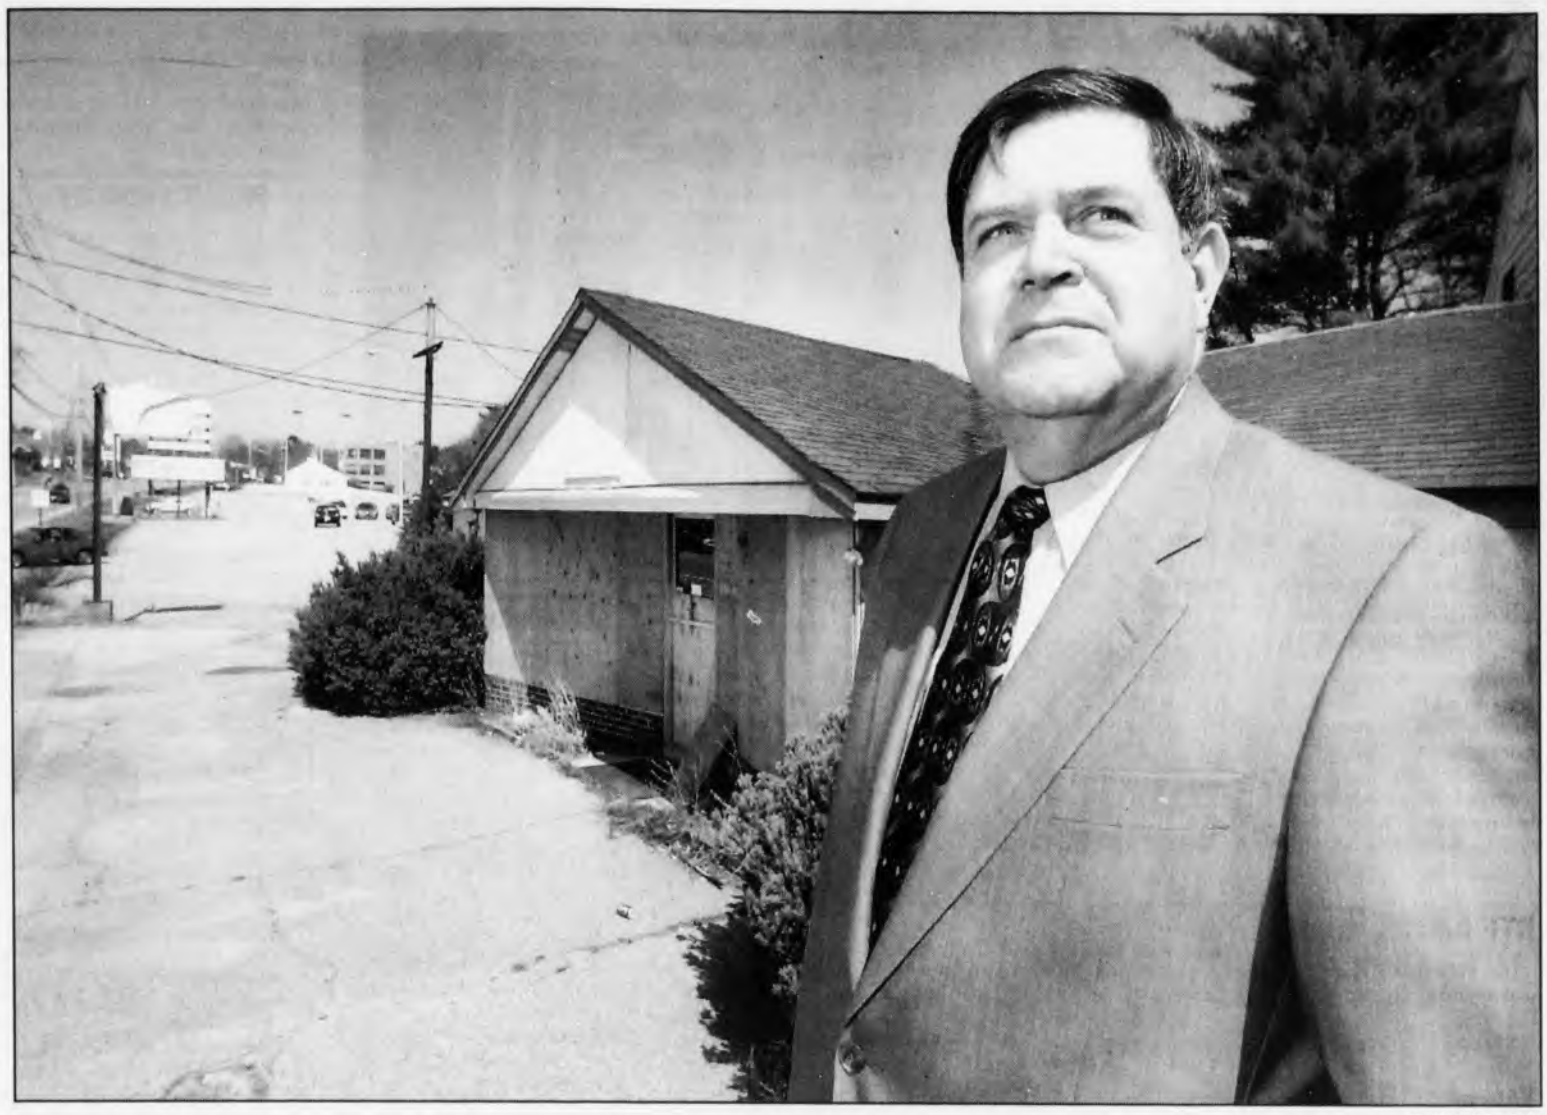
Pilgrim Co-operative Bank branches out to Route 3A



Will keep main office in village

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

After more than 80 years as a Cohasset Village landmark, Pilgrim Co-operative Bank sees the need to expand. While a friendly smile and knowing customers by name remain staples of the institution, customer service will expand to include a drive-up ATM and tellers – something impossible to do in its downtown spot.

As a result, the bank plans to construct its first ever branch office —a 4,300 square foot building at the corner of Route 3A and Brewster Road, complete with two drive-up teller lanes, two ATMs, and safety deposit boxes.

"Our roots are in this community. Our assets come from the community. We are Cohasset's only locally-owned bank."
— Paul Gauthier

Paul Gauthier, president of the Pilgrim Co-operative Bank, stands outside the site at Rte. 3A and Brewster Road where a new bank branch will be built.

"This is the key to the next 30 years," said bank president Paul Gauthier. "We have a level of services that our competitors can't provide. And now we'll have space to provide even more."

Gauthier said the South Main Street office will remain open. The only major difference is that the bank's mortgage department will call Route 3A home. He estimated mortgages make up approximately 80 percent of his institution's assets.

"Our roots are in this community. Our assets come from the community. We are Cohasset's only locally-owned bank," Gauthier said this week.

The new building, designed by Financial Concepts of Natick, a firm specializing in bank design, won early approval from the town planning board last week. It will replace the boarded-up, dilapidated building, which was at one time a liquor store and then art studio. Gauthier hopes to start demolition work this summer and have the branch open by the end of the year.

The plan calls for a main entrance off Brewster Road, as well as another access spot through the adjacent Tedeschi Plaza. The now-paved entrance off Route 3A will be closed and replaced with a green strip of plants and trees, running from the Tedeschi Plaza entrance, all the way around to the Brewster Road entrance.

Gauthier, who replaced 42-year bank president Ed Mulvey in 1997, says he plans to have space for five tellers, safety deposit boxes, an ATM both inside and outside of the gray, clapboard building, and the bank's new mortgage office.

The plan was well-received by both the planning board and at least one future neighbor.

"I'm grateful to [the bank] for cleaning up that eyesore," Ledge Way resident Cynthia Hurley said at the public hearing last week. "I'm thrilled it's going in."

Planning Board member Bill Good also gave his thumbs-up. "I like this project. I think it's terrific," he said.

Gauthier said the Route 3A space is "just right" and that his business shouldn't impact the residential neighborhood off Brewster Road past the bank entrance.

He especially liked the drive-through teller service the bank will provide.

"A mother that has kids in the car isn't going to get them out of the car, to go into a bank," he said, "it's not going to happen." Instead, mothers will be able to zip through the teller lane and stay in their cars.

The site will also open the bank up to a new market of customers. "We're a clear shot to North Scituate," he said.

During the recent trend of mega-bank mergers, Pilgrim Co-operative Bank, and its 6,000 deposit accounts, has remained intact and independent. Gauthier chalks that up to the different philosophies of mega-banks and a "retail thrift institution" such as Pilgrim Co-operative, which currently employs 15 people.

"We know our customers by name. We have a president that opens accounts. It's not unusual for the president to answer the phone," said Gauthier. "And we can work on a little smaller of a profit margin and still provide all the standard electronic services."

Gauthier told the planning board, and repeated it again this week, that the new branch will have no negative impact on the bank's main branch. "We've been on South Main Street since 1916 and we're not moving," he said. "This is the next step for the institution; a significant step for the bank."

Two bouncing baby boys make their debut

SEND IN NEWS

Hello Cohasset! It is here, Spring is really here! Yeah! I have had so many wonderful items being dropped off, mailed or emailed to me about some great springtime events. Make sure to try and take advantage of some, they really sound like fun. I have had several children ask me when they are going to see their birthdays in the paper. I keep telling them the same thing, "if I don't get the information, I can't put it in!" Please try to get me all your news, birthdays, births, weddings, showers or anything that is happening with your family and friends.

BOUNCING BABY BOYS

I want to start this week's column by announcing two wonderful little guys. The first, Matthew Peter Luscombe, born on Dec. 15, 2001. Matthew's parents are Lauren (Wood) and Shane Luscombe, and together with baby Matthew are living on the North Shore. Matthew's very proud grandparents are Mardi and Peter Wood of Cohasset and Alan and Tammy Luscombe of Hempstead, N.H. I am sure this wonderful addition to the family is being loved and hugged each day.

The second little guy to announce is Matthew Lucas Foote, born on March 4, 2001 to Wade and Carla (Lucas) Foote. Matthew's late grandfather, Tom Lucas, would be so proud, I am sure. Matthew has a big sister, Beth Morgan who is six and is thrilled with her new little brother. Matthew's paternal grandparents are Lawrence and Sally Foote or Mt. Pleasant, Mich. Congratulations to all of you on the birth of baby Matthew!

Two members of the Community Garden Club show off the club's entry in the Large Bow Window category at the New England Flower Show.

APPALACHIA FESTIVAL

An enjoyable and worthwhile event coming up is the Appalachian Festival being held on Saturday, April 28 at the St. Anthony's Parish Center. Tickets are available at St. Anthony's, St. Stephen's, First Parish and The Second Congregational Church. This event includes a Market Place from 4-6 with storytelling, Appalachian crafts and snacks and a slide presentation. A family style dinner will be served at 6:30 and this will all end with a terrific Cloggers and Blue Grass Band performance at 7:30. For the dinner and performance, the cost is $20 per adult, $10 for 13-18 and 12 and under are $5. For the performance only, it is $10 for adults and teens and 12 and under are free. For more information on this and the ASP project, log onto www.CohassetASP.org

GARDEN CLUB PROJECT

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset entered the Large Show Bow Window category in this year's New England Spring Flower Show. Their focal point, keyed to the show's theme, "The Inspired Garden", was an artist's sculpture of a whimsical dog swimming through space-a symbol of freedom and magic and delight-a version of March Madness, where anything is possible. An excellent committee of five: Sally Avery, Ellen Bertovich, Judy Dickstein, Barbara Dillon and Lee Drew backed co-chairwomen Phyllis Peck and Annette Sechen in pursuit of "Horticultural Excellence" with plants purchased three months prior to the show as required. Not having greenhouse facilities, achieving bloom at the right time for a south-facing window in the middle of March proved to be extremely difficult. The camaraderie, dedication and high spirits of this committee made this a memorable project and lots of fun.

COVER ARTICLE

I had a great note about Cohasset native, Michael Gurnis. Michael, Cohasset educated whose parents still live on Reservoir Road, is now a professor at Cal. Tech and is the author of the lead (cover) article in the March issue of Scientific American! What a great accomplishment for you, Michael. Congratulations.

Local woman makes a marathon effort for diabetes

Runner raises awareness and money for research

By Jim Logan
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset native Dyan Young is busy readying for the run of her life these days. As the recent winner in the women's division of the Cohasset-By-The-Sea 10K road-race, Young is preparing for her first full-fledged marathon on June 24 in Kona, Hawaii. The 26.2-mile event — a race to help raise funds and boost awareness for teen diabetes worldwide — will also be undertaken locally by members of the New England chapter of the American Diabetes Association of which Young is a member.

The 34-year old Young — fresh off her 43:13 minute, first-place performance in the community 10K-competition two weeks ago — is both thrilled and eager to take part in her upcoming contest, and for many different reasons.

"I'm excited to be running my first marathon and being out there in Hawaii. I've looked it up (the marathon route) on the Internet, and they say it's a beautiful course. Not a bad place to be (Hawaii) for your first one," Young jokes.

"I'm also real happy to be going out there to Kona and doing this for a great cause. It's nice to be able to take something that you love, like I love running, and put it to a use and run for a purpose. If I can help in a small way to make a difference in fighting this disease, while at the same time getting to do something I really enjoy, that's a great feeling."

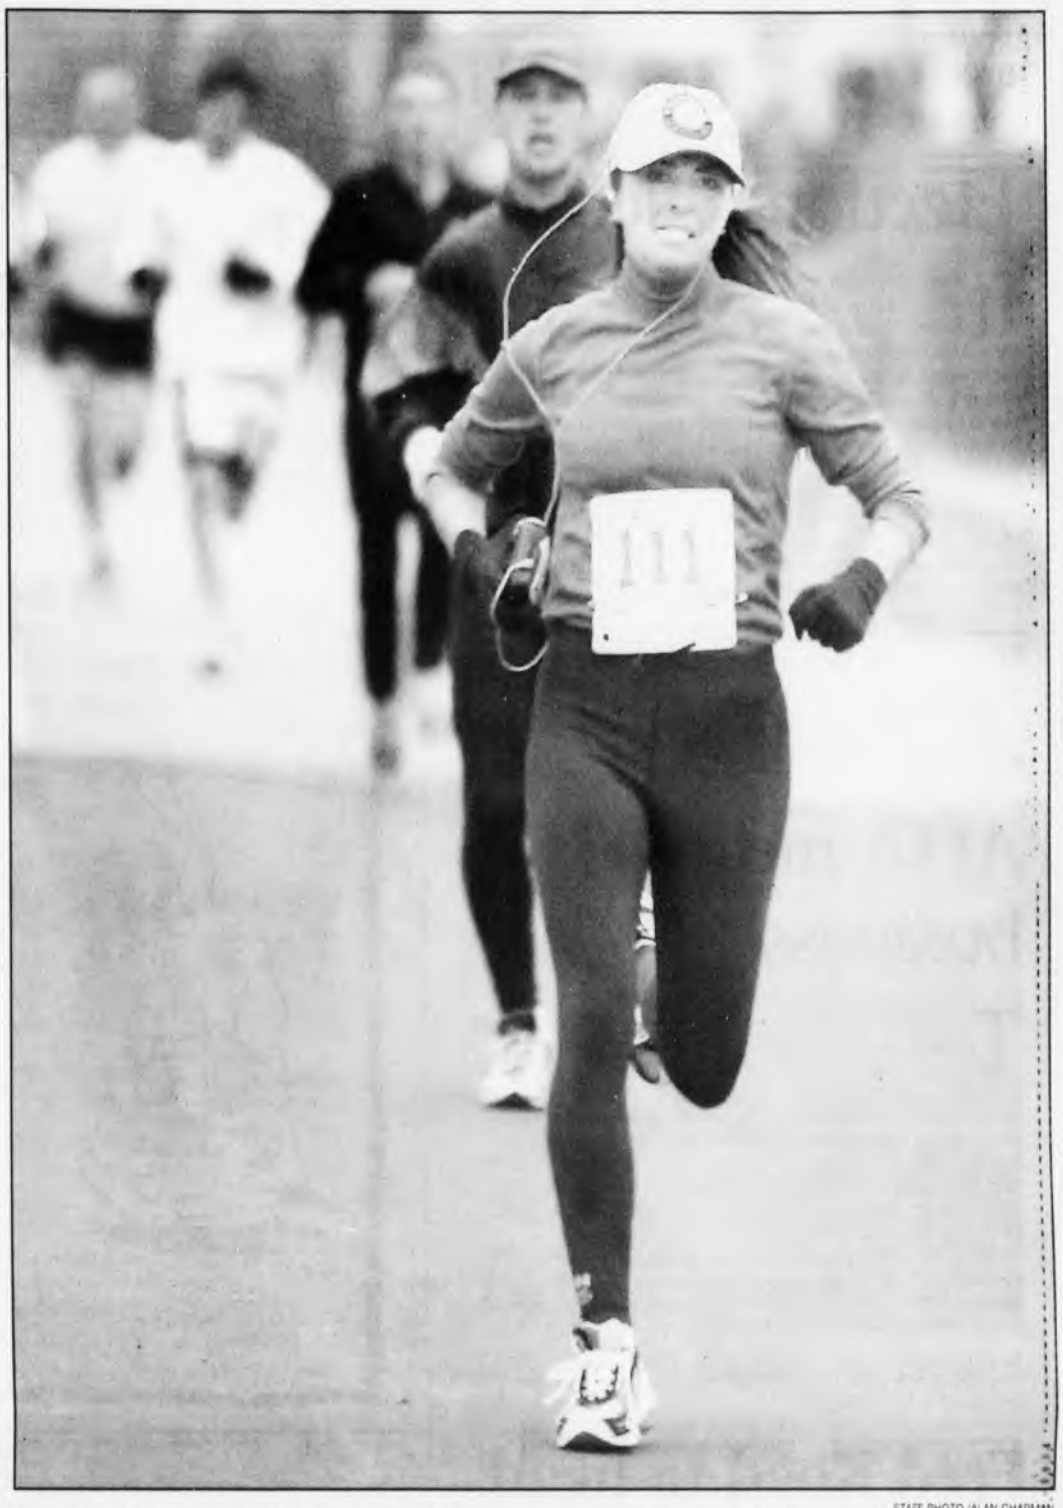
"It's nice to be able to take something that you love, like I love running, and put it to a use and run for a purpose."
— Dyan Young

What got her so interested in fighting diabetes? In addition to having family members such as her grandfather coping with the disease and friends who live with the illness, Young says nearly 15 million Americans suffer from the life-altering ailment, and according to researchers at the American Diabetes Association more than 2,000 new cases are confirmed each and every day.

It's a malady that affects a multitude of people either directly or indirectly, figures Young; she has seen it certainly within her own circle of life and, she just wants to assist in any way she can to make the dream of finding a cure become reality.

"I think everybody out there knows of someone, either in their own immediate family or through friends and neighbors, that is living with diabetes. It's just that big (of a disease)," Young says. "There are many people right here in our community that deal with diabetes on a daily basis." "The ultimate goal is obviously finding a cure, and that's really the main reason for this (Kona) run."

When she's not working — either at her job for a local child-care placement agency or bartending part-time for the Red Lion Inn — Young is still quite busy these days, training for the impending Kona Marathon. Along with running partner and fiancé Richard Kurtz (who will also be participating in the Kona run), Young is hard at work preparing for her Hawaiian "vacation." She is presently in the 11th week of a five-month regiment, which includes "dawn-break" early morning 14-mile sessions per day, and a more than 70-mile trek per week. In addition, Young trains every two-weeks or so with her fellow New England chapter A.D.A. members in Rhode Island. The Cohasset resident is slowly building herself up to the requisite 26.2-mile endurance for the race, and says that things are coming along pretty well.



"I've run as many as sixteen-miles before, so I don't mind going on for long distances," Young says. "It's a lot of work, but I enjoy running so much, I guess that (feeling) kind of helps out dealing the physical demands of preparing for the marathon."

While many of us will more than likely be enjoying our first or second real "beach weather" week around here come the third week in June, Young will be soaking up the rays somewhere else — on a marathon course in the land of the grass skirts. And while we'll all be having fun in our own way, Young will be savoring a little extra on that June 24 afternoon.

She'll truly be mixing business in with pleasure. "It's going to be a lot of fun out there in Kona. It'll be a huge challenge for me personally to do well," Young says. "And, it's also going to feel nice running to help out such a worthy [charity]. I'm really looking forward to it."

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Election reflection

It didn't start out as being one of the more exciting Town Elections. Without a race for selectman and no organized opposition to the override or Community Preservation Act — the annual town ritual seemed pretty mundane.

But behind the scenes a hot contest was simmering for the school committee. Adrienne MacCarthy of Doane Street bucked tradition and challenged incumbents Pat Martin and Mark DeGiacomo in a three-way race for two seats. It's the first race against a school committee incumbent in recent memory — that's because there's been a fairly high burnout rate on the board with many opting to serve just one term.

The race went down to the wire between Mrs. MacCarthy and Mrs. Martin, who won by just three votes, prompting a recount.

For Richard Brown, a political newcomer, the planning board race was a long shot, once former selectman and water commissioner Peter Pratt threw his hat into the ring. Mr. Brown lost but came away with a new perspective and enthusiasm for town politics.

We thank both Mr. Brown and Mrs. MacCarthy giving us contests this year. They jumped into the fray with determination and enthusiasm and helped bring some differences over issues to the forefront.

We also congratulate all candidates, opposed and unopposed, for their continued service to the town.

AfTA means business

There's no doubt that the new anti-train group AfTA is out to get Greenbush. The apparently well-financed group is going to launch lawsuits to derail the project in addition to trying to gain more public support through newspaper inserts on a range of transportation issues. The shifting sands of the Greenbush saga never cease to amaze us. We've written literally hundreds of stories over the past decade — and have come close to declaring the train dead more than once. But clearly the momentum at the moment is on the side of the MBTA. Hingham has inked its mitigation deal with the state agency with Cohasset and Scituate expected to follow suit soon.

But even as the shovels ready to break ground — perhaps as early as next summer — changes at the statehouse and in the economy, could mean some dark clouds loom ahead for the project. We can only wait and see, and share with you the developments as they unfurl.

Fred Koed to head board of selectmen

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen unanimously voted to name third-year member Frederick Koed as its new chairman, in its annual board reorganization Tuesday night.

"I consider it an honor and will serve the position to the best of my abilities," Koed said.

Koed, who served as vice-chairman for the past year, was nominated to take the middle seat by fellow Selectman Merle Brown.

Brown also nominated Michael Sullivan as the board's vice-chairman, which was also approved unanimously.

Koed has previously served as chairman of both the Water Commission and Advisory Committee.

Koed has not been known as the most loquacious selectman, but said that's a trait he hopes to break in the upcoming year.

"I heard that from my wife this morning, I guess I have to work on that," Koed said the day after chairing his first meeting. "Though I don't feel obligated to talk if I don't have something to contribute at that moment."

He said he felt comfortable holding the gavel by the end of the meeting, despite it running a bit longer than scheduled. Koed said the biggest challenge is making sure everyone is treated fairly without allowing meetings to drag on.

"It's a tough balance to try and keep the meeting efficient, and try to let everybody's concerns be heard in order to make an intelligent decision," he said.

Koed added that he doesn't think a chairman should use his position to influence decisions but instead should make sure all sides have been heard.

With Koed's election, every member of the current board has now served as chairman at one point or another. Callahan served as chairman in 2000, Ronnie McMorris in 1999 and Brown in 1998. Sullivan was chairman in each of his two prior terms.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Silent weekend

TO THE EDITOR,

Did residents notice the odd silence this weekend? Especially Saturday and Saturday night? It was like the "old" days! There were planes off and on all day but never did they reach an unacceptable level the whole weekend! Did anyone experience otherwise? I contacted Massport officials to check on the flight tracks and sure enough, flight patterns which were seldom if ever used anymore were being used. I told the official how pleasant it was to be outside and to sleep again. I was told that maybe the tower chief was listening to us! We can only hope that this is true!

Another reason, (I hope this is not the case) could be the fact that Massport, had a copy of my letter from last week's local newspapers, which they had called me about to discuss. Could it be that Massport is more concerned about people finding out what they were doing to us and planning to do, rather than actual concern for our health and well being? Do they want the South Shore to know that every flight landing on the new runway will first pass over the South Shore?

Everyone should review the new runway documents available at Hingham ,Hull, and Cohasset libraries, which also contain maps of the area, if you do not want to read thousands of pages, and decide for yourself, which of the reasons above is true. The maps make it very clear what is planned for the South Shore. Contact your Representatives, Massport, and the FAA listed in the report, to voice your concerns before the deadline for public comment ends.

When you are bothered by the jet noise there is also a 24 hour complaint line to Massport. The # is (617) 561-3333, press 2 for direct connection, if you do not want to listen to the message. Make sure to have a copy of your complaint mailed to you for record.

Which ever reason is true above, the one thing it did show was that the constant noise experienced, does not need to be. It can be shared by all in the Greater Boston area. No area should bear the burden of Logan.

Heartfelt thanks

TO THE EDITOR:

We would like to thank all of the neighbors and municipal workers that helped us during the severe rainstorms. Contractors Fred Higgins and Hap Pompeo, the Hills, the Fire Department and the Highway Department, were all more than generous in their concern and efforts in preventing serious water damage to our home. In such terrible rain and cold these people helped remove large amounts of water from our garage and calmed or fears. We just wanted to thank them all from the bottom of our hearts.

COHASSET CARES

Earth Day 2001

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Sunday April 22 is Earth Day. My batteries received an extra charge on Saturday, March 31, however, when Cape and Islands' Self Reliance group sponsored its all-day Earth Day 2001 conference at Chatham

Why am I so uplifted by the event? Was it the wind turbines? OK, down to earth, here, was it the presentation on organic land care? Moved by hybrid cars? Actually it was the enthusiastic overflow crowd, almost twice what was expected, and exhibiting the obvious bonding backlash created by Bush's anti-environmentalism. And secondly, it was the expertise of the speakers.

Starting off the day was Ross Gelbspan, Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist and author of "The Heat is On: The High Stakes Battle over Earth's Threatened Climate" [1997]. Gelbspan is an excellent speaker, extremely knowledgeable, and has spoken at government forums around the world. I need much more space to begin to do him justice, but some highlights are: Our present climate crisis is most ominous because the planet is heating faster than it has in 10,000 years [severe downpours are one result]; these disasters are precisely what computer models projected; high-ranking insurance officials admit that the insurance business could be bankrupted soon; by 2065 the entire economy could be bankrupted; ours is not the climate of economic prosperity; heat increases insects and pathologies; we see extraordinarily successful deception and misinformation by the oil and coal industries; facts, not theory, bespeak profound consequences; professional skeptics are heavily paid by oil and coal public relations; there are no debates in the rest of the world [as to the need for emissions reductions] - other countries have no issue with what the scientists are saying; the U.S. is gambling with its eyes closed, and we are facing economic warfare; the nuclear industry is non-sustainable because of the waste problem; the answer is political change; BP, Shell, Ford, and Chrysler are making positive moves, while Texaco and Exxon- Mobil are not; we are now for the first time as powerful as nature.

Other highlights from other speakers: Rep. Matthew Patrick urges us to support environmental Bill#360. He said, "If I receive three handwritten letters I begin to take notice. When I get a handwritten letter I read the whole thing. I skim the first paragraph of a form letter and then discard it. E-mails never make it to the legislators. Ten letters to a legislator is a big deal."

The scientist who spoke on wind power said that with regard to photovoltaics, the sun here is comparable to that in New Mexico.

The representative from the Cape Cod water commission said that 300 million people a year die from impure water problems. MTBE, a carcinogen extremely soluble in water, makes up 11 percent of our gasoline.

The organic expert began by reminding us that we all live downstream. The most important thing we can do to our soil is to add organic matter, not chemical fertilizers, which upset the original balance of the soil and cause detrimental insects to reproduce even faster. Don't mow too close. Leave your clippings on the lawn [compost only the excess].

Dr. Donald Aitken is Senior Consulting Scientist for renewable energy with the Union of Concerned Scientists. He spoke on "The Environmental and Economic Aspects of the Renewable Energy Transition." [He spoke to the Nevada legislature the day before.] Dr. Aitken patterned his presentation on replies to recent comments by Bush, beginning with the President's statement "First things first are the people who live in America." Dr.Aitken replied that bailing out of Kyoto is the worst thing we can do regarding job loss; the earth has never seen such a carbon dioxide rise; we are seeing signs of the end of agriculture in the U.S.; in Sacramento the cost of a solar roof is now the same as the cost of a regular roof.

The Director of Mass Alternative Fuels Program enlightened us with news of the hundreds of State vehicles now operating on natural gas. [I watched an attendee wipe his finger around the inside of one of their well-used vehicles' tailpipes and withdraw it spotless.]

Dr. John Todd of the University of Vermont concluded the conference with encouraging info about new methods of processing waste with plants, fish, and microscopic organisms whose natural ability to process waste far exceeds anything humans have been able to replicate.

Thirty environmental organizations and businesses had table exhibits. And that's all for now. See you next time.

Last recount was 1984

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

If School Committee candidate Adrienne MacCarthy submits her request for a recount by the April 17 deadline, Town Clerk Marion Douglas will have to receive the petition and verify its signatures.

MacCarthy lost by three votes to current school committee chairman Pat Martin in Saturday's Town Election, 957 to 960. Fellow school committee member Mark DeGiacomo received 1,077 votes in a three-way race for the two school committee seats.

"Then the town Board of Registrars will meet and certify the petition," explained new Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed. Koed is no stranger to recounts — he was the head clerk in for the Palm Beach County Democratic Party during this past fall's presidential election recount.

The town Board of Registrars is made up of two Democrats, Town Clerk Marion Douglas and Margaret Charles, and two Republicans, Judith Volungis and Edythe Ford.

Once certified, an agreeable date to hold the recount will be set. He said MacCarthy can request either a hand recount or machine recount. If a ballot is rejected by a machine, it is set aside in a separate pile. The Board of Registrars then go through the rejected ballots and count them by hand. "The Board of Registrars are like election commissioners. They oversee everything," Koed said. "The registrars make a ruling on any disputed calls. Both sides can still object to a ruling."

If a ballot remains disputed, Koed said, it could ultimately end up before a judge.

Koed said state rule of thumb is each candidate is allowed one observer for every town worker.

The recount would be the first recount in a town race since the 1984 Selectman's race between Mary Jane McArthur and Doris Golden.

The three-vote difference in school committee seat would have been considered a landslide in 1984, when both McArthur and Golden received 1,000 votes a piece. The subsequent recount of the punch-card ballots yielded only one extra vote to McArthur's total, said Koed. A judge eventually ordered a new election, and in June, McArthur won a bit more easily, 1,623 votes to 867 votes.

Confessions of a meat eater

I wasn't feeling too well last week.

Oh, it was nothing serious. Just a few aching joints. Hot breath. Loss of appetite. And a burning desire to use the little room with a sink, a bathtub and a more personal utility with considerable frequency.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

It was the kind of ailment that was usually handled quite well by two aspirin, copious quantities of golden dry ginger ale, my grandmother's secret "get well" formula and a day or so under the covers with the radio tuned to the ball game after first making sure the path of the bathroom was cleared for the dash.

Nothing special. It's happened dozens of times. This time, however, there was a difference. I had just completed my umpteenth dash to the bathroom — in the nick of time, you'll be glad to note — when I heard a member of my immediate family explaining my plight to a friend over the telephone.

"He's been eating meat," he said. "That'll do it every time."

Of course I'd been eating meat. I've been eating meat ever since my mother cracked open the first jar of Gerber's strained veal and spinach for me during the administration of Calvin Coolidge and, believe me, if you can eat that you'll be hooked on meat for life. I'm not talking about spinach.

In the ensuing years, I figure I've eaten a whole herd of cows off the Old Chisholm Trail, including spaghetti and meat balls with Ted Kennedy in Blackie Burke's backyard in Brockton during the '62 campaign and enough hot dogs, garnished with mustard, relish and sand, at Nantasket Beach to feed a starving African village.

I've known some vegetarians along the way and most of them are nice people, as long as they stay out of the kitchen.

Oh, I've known some vegetarians along the way and most of them are nice people, as long as they stay out of the kitchen.

There was Judy, that girl in New York City who was a member of the Ethical Culture Society, which she described as an organization for Jewish atheists, whatever that means. Every now and then, she would slip into a mode that I would call "defiantly Jewish."

After a hot date drinking white zinfandel at a midtown art show, we'd repair for a late supper at Thau's, a dairy restaurant in the lower East Side. Have you ever had vegetarian meat loaf? Try not to. Not even an art show by Jackson Pollock himself could rescue a relationship after too much of that.

Then there was the woman in North Quincy, a self-confessed vegetarian but otherwise normal, who once cooked me spaghetti and meat balls. "Meat balls?" I asked with a quizzical stare. "It's okay," she said. "You start with some ground up walnuts . . . " I have to admit, they were better than meatless meat loaf.

So far, the family member —who shall remain nameless because he's big enough to yell at me now — has shown no signs of a desire to join PETA, the outfit that paints white mustaches on pictures of cancer patients to remind one and all that an animal product called "milk" can give you horrible diseases.

PETA stands for People for Ethical Treatment of Animals.

I'm looking for an organization called PETRME — People for the Ethical Treatment of Retired Meat Eaters.

and said she was in part requesting a recount for everyone that supported her.

"I feel I owe it to my supporters. So many have said I've got to do it," she said.

Martin, who wasn't at Town Hall when the vote results were announced Saturday evening, was notified by DeGiacomo of her razor-thin win.

"I thought he was teasing me," she said. "Then I was happy."

She also said she doesn't blame MacCarthy for requesting a recount. Martin said her challenger called Saturday night to tell her of her intentions. "She feels she owes it to her supporters and I can understand," Martin said.

Even on Saturday afternoon Martin recognized the possibility of the race coming down to the wire. In between holding signs and waving to cars on the corner of North Main Street and Robert E. Jason Road, Martin called up supporters on a cell phone urging them to come down and vote.

"Our worry was after talking to so many of our supporters, so many in our camp felt 'What's the worry?' and that they'd take the election for granted, and we found out they did," Martin explained. "So we reminded them to come out and vote and I'm glad they did."

DeGiacomo, who kept a low-profile during the race, not raising any money or distributing lawn signs, thanked everyone who supported him. "I'm pleased with the amount of support I received from the town…I had hoped that people would know me and knew I was doing a good job," he said. "I'm gratified that this appears to be the case."

MacCarthy was encouraged by the results, even if she did come up three votes shy.

"I think it validates what I was trying to do," said MacCarthy who ran a campaign that emphasized creating a priority spending list for the school department. "Not everything is rosy, and there are concerns that people have, and people do want to see some change. Hopefully the school committee will open themselves up to some of my ideas."

Interestingly, more than 600 blank votes were cast in the school committee race, the most of any town race.

Martin thought that could be chalked up to a voting strategy called "bullet balloting." Bullet balloting happens when voters can vote for more than one candidate. Despite being able to vote for more, the voter will vote just for his or her candidate in an attempt to mathematically improve that candidate's chances of being elected.

Martin said she urged her supporters not to do that, in fear that it could hurt DeGiacomo. "It certainly proved true. Although he didn't eke it out by three votes, he didn't have a big landslide either," she said.

Planning board

In the other town race, Ripley Road resident Peter Pratt fended off Richard Brown of Church Street, 1,046 votes to 610 votes.

Pratt said his win, coupled by the town's approval of the Community Preservation Act made it a doubly-good day.

"I was particularly heartened not only by the fact voters did seek to elect me to the planning board but also that the CPA passed as well," he said. "Together I take it as a sign the community is potentially turning to look more seriously at strategies to protect the natural resources and character of our town."

Pratt said he considered the vote a strong indication that people support his town-planning positions.

"I've talked extensively with folks and think my vote is a reflection of the fact that many residents in Cohasset do not feel we are working to control development well enough, in the harbor, in Cohasset Village and abutting commercial districts on Route 3A."

Brown, who was running in his first-ever political race, said he knew his chances of winning were slim, but was pleased with his showing.

"When I started running, I ran unopposed, but as soon as I saw that Peter had taken papers out, I knew I wasn't going to beat him. But I wasn't going to pull out of the race either," Brown said. "I think I got a good number of votes for someone who has never run before, so it was OK — I'm not disappointed with anything I did."

Brown called Pratt "brilliant" and was confident he would "do a great job" on the planning board. He also didn't rule out another run in the future. "If I decide to run again, maybe he'll be on my side," Brown joked.

there's the possibility of 1,300 more houses in town," Jenkins said. "I asked them if they were going to buy lots around town, and they said they weren't…Nothing's going to stop the development."

The override is the third in three years.

In 1999, the town approved a $380,000 override. Last year, town residents said yes to a $41 million debt exclusion override for the Deer Hill and middle/high school renovation projects.

North Scituate station still on Greenbush track

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@CNC.COM

Scituate won't take the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority up on its offer to cut the North Scituate station from its Greenbush rail restoration plans after all.

In an hour-long meeting with 30 local residents and merchants last Thursday, Scituate selectmen voted 4-1 not to scrap the station and 400-space commuter parking lot planned for the village. Selectman Joseph Norton, who has suggested eliminating the station in the past, cast the lone dissenting vote.

By eliminating the station, roughly 80-170 parking spaces would be added to the 1100 space Greenbush station proposed off the Driftway, and the rest of the spaces originally planned for North Scituate would be added to station lots further up the 17.7-mile rail line, including Cohasset.

"It's unrealistic that people will drive backwards to park their cars in Greenbush."

— Selectman Tom Callahan

The station cut was offered to Scituate at a meeting between state Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan and local legislators who brought a list of Scituate's mitigation requests and rail concerns to the meeting. According to Scituate Selectman Susan Phippen, the station elimination was the only proposal brought forward at that meeting that the MBTA has addressed to date.

Norton made a motion at the meeting to put off making a decision on the North Scituate station until a committee to study the impact of a station in other areas of town was formed. While some residents voiced their approval by shouting "Thanks, Joe," Norton received no support for that plan from his fellow board members.

Phippen said that by delaying the decision the board simply was "delaying the inevitable."

But Norton disagreed.

"The suggestion is not a way to delay (a decision)," Norton told the board. "If there is no station the train will go through 15 times a day… (with) no other effect other than the tracks. But the station itself will be there seven days a week. It's something we must give an awful lot of thought to."

Phippen maintained "without the station, I see North Scituate getting all the negatives."

Concern about adding congestion to the Greenbush station and village area was one of the factors in board member's decision to keep the station in North Scituate.

"Greenbush is already taking their fair share with 1,000 spaces," Phippen said.

Scituate residents and merchants weren't the only ones concerned about the station decision.

Cohasset Selectmen Chairman Tom Callahan was on hand for the meeting to voice opposition to cutting the North Scituate station.

"The Cohasset Board of Selectmen opposes the closing of the North Scituate station," he told Scituate Selectmen. Callahan said town officials in Cohasset fear there will be increased traffic congestion at the planned Cohasset station if North Scituate is cut. "It's unrealistic that people will drive backwards to park their cars in Greenbush."

Another concern raised was that by cutting the station, business in the village would suffer.

Norton dismissed that notion.

"North Scituate is not an area that's on its way out, it's on the way up. The train not being in North Scituate is not going to kill North Scituate."
